Part I.—Classification.

SECT. 1.—Introductory.

1. This title is concerned with mistake as a foundation of relief in a civil court of justice.

At common law, mistake was admitted as a foundation of relief in three cases only, namely :—

(1) In actions “for money had and received” to recover money paid under a mistake of fact (a);

(2) In actions of deceit to recover damages in respect of a mistake induced by fraudulent misrepresentation (b); and

(3) As a defence in actions of contract where the mistake of fact was of such a nature as to preclude the formation of any contract in law, as, for example, where there was a mutual mistake as to the subject-matter of the contract, and, therefore, no consensus ad idem by the parties (c), or where the mistake was made as to the identity of one of the parties where such identity was an inducement to the other to enter into the contract (d), or where the mistake related to the nature of the contract under such circumstances as would, if the contract were embodied in a deed, justify a plea of non est factum (e).

In equity, mistake gives title to relief in a much wider range of cases than at common law, though it must be borne in mind that “mistake,” as a legal term on which a right to relief may be founded, has a much narrower meaning than as a popular expression.

The relationship between the parties to a transaction may impose a duty upon one party to inform the mind of the other party of all the material facts, and if, in such a case, the party owing such duty enters into a transaction with the party to whom the duty is owed, without informing him of all material facts, the latter is entitled to relief on the ground of breach of duty (f).

2. A mistake may be a mistake consisting of ignorance (g) or Mistake a ground of relief.

At common law.

In equity.

Relationship of parties.

Nature of mistake.

forgetfulness (h) of a material fact, or arising out of the belief in the existence of the subject-matter of a transaction where it has ceased to exist (i), or of some fact which forms the basis of the transaction which is not true (j). Beyond this, however, it is impossible to give a complete or exact definition of mistake, as the courts have always refrained from attempting to do so (k).

Mistakes as to private rights are rather to be classed among instances of error in fact than in law (l), even where there are no circumstances of circumvention or fraud (m).

SECT. 1.
Introductory.

Mistake as to private rights.

SECT. 2.—Classification.

3. This title is confined to the effect of mistake in relation to contracts and settlements.

Two systems of classification.

Mistakes in relation to contracts may be classified having regard either to the nature of the mistake or to the persons by whom and the circumstances under which the mistake is made, these being cross-divisions.

4. Mistakes having regard to their nature may be divided into (1) those which prevent there being a binding consent to a particular transaction (n), and (2) those which arise in the expression in writing of the intention with regard to a particular transaction (o).

Classification having regard to nature of mistake.

Class (1) may be divided into (i.) mistakes as to general law (p), and (ii.) mistakes as to fact, including private legal rights.

Class (ii.) may be divided into (a) mistakes as to the nature of the transaction (q); (b) mistakes as to the identity of the other party to the transaction (r); and (c) mistakes as to the subject-matter of the transaction, which last-mentioned mistakes may be either as to the identity of (s), or as to some fact materially connected with (t), the subject-matter.

5. Mistakes having regard to the persons by whom and the circumstances under which they are made may be divided into (1) mistakes when there is only one party to the transaction (u), and (2) mistakes when there are two or more parties to the transaction (v).

Classification having regard to persons by whom mistake made.

(l) As to mistake of law, and as to questions of mixed law and fact, see p. 4, post.

(m) Clifton v. Cockburn (1834), 3 My. & K. 76. It appears from Denys v. Shuckburgh (1840), 4 Y. & C. (EX.) 42, that a misapprehension of rights under a deed not arising from the misconstruction of the deed is a mistake of fact.

(u) E.g., transactions by deed poll (see pp. 12, 23, 24, post) or gifts by will (as to which see title WILLS).

(v) See p. 5, post.

SECT. 2.
Classification.

Class (2) may be divided into (i.) cases where the mistake is mutual, that is, made equally by both or all parties (w), and (ii.) cases where the mistake is unilateral, that is, made by one party only (x).

Class (ii.) may be divided into (a) cases where the mistake was not conduced to or known of by the other party; (b) cases where the other party did not conduce to the mistake but knew of it and may or may not have been under a duty to disclose the true facts (a); and (c) cases where the other party conduced to the mistake by innocent misrepresentation (b).

Part II.—Mistake of Law.

Relief not available.

Mistake must be one of general law.

Circumstances excluding the
of the rule.

6. Relief will not be granted on the ground of mistake if the mistake is one of law as distinguished from one of fact (c). The distinction between mistakes of law and mistakes of fact has never been clearly defined by the courts (d), but it may be taken that to exclude the right to relief the mistake must be one of general law (e), such, for example, as the legal interpretation of a contract (f).

7. Thus the above rule does not apply to ignorance of a private right, although the private right is the result of a matter of law (g), or depends upon rules of law applied to the construction of legal instruments (h); nor does it apply to ignorance of a right which depends upon questions of mixed law and fact, and a statement of fact which involves a conclusion of law is still a statement of fact and not a statement of law (i), while mistake as to the law of a foreign country which is clearly, in one sense, a mistake of law, is held in this country to be a mistake of fact (k).

Even where the mistake is held to be in a matter of law, however, the court may grant relief (l), if there are circumstances which make it inequitable upon the facts of the particular case that the act should stand. But relief will not be granted where a party, having been made aware of the question of law on which his title depends, under circumstances which might have given him equitable right to relief, determines to waive it (m).

(w) The remedy in such case may be either rescission (see p. 17, post), or rectification (see p. 20, post) or refusal of specific performance (see p. 24, post).

(x) The remedy in this case may be rescission (see p. 17, post), but is usually refusal of specific performance (see pp. 7, 10, 24, post).

PART II.
Mistake of

Part III.—Mistake of Fact.

SECT. 1.—Mistake as to the Nature of the Transaction.

8. In the case of onerous contracts reduced to writing, the erroneous belief of one of the contracting parties in regard to the nature of the obligations which he has undertaken is not sufficient to give him the right to rescind, unless such belief has been induced by representation, fraudulent or otherwise, of the other party to the contract (n).

Mistake as to
contractual

SECT. 2.—Mistake as to the Identity of the Other Party.

9. Where a mistake is made as to the identity of one of the parties to a transaction, in cases where the identity of the person with whom the agreement was intended to be made was an inducement to the other to enter into the agreement, there is no real agreement formed; but, where the identity of the person is immaterial, the mistake as to identity does not, in the absence of fraud, affect the transaction (o).

Stone* (1898), 78 L. SECT. 2.
Identity of the Other Party.

The misdescription of the purchaser does not render a conveyance inoperative or prevent the legal estate from passing where it can be ascertained who was meant by the person misdescribed (p).

SECT. 3.—Mistake as to the Identity of the Subject-matter of the Transaction.

SUB-SECT. 1.—When the Contract is Ambiguous.

Admissibility of evidence.

10. Where the words used in a contract, though clear in themselves, are equally applicable to two different things or subject-matters, evidence is admissible to show which of them was the thing or subject-matter intended (q), but unless the evidence is sufficiently clear to establish satisfactorily that both parties had the same thing or subject-matter in view (r), there is no contract (s).

non nocet.*

11. Where the subject-matter of a contract is identified with sufficient legal certainty, but there is some inaccuracy in the description or some addition to the description which is inaccurate, the inaccuracy may be rejected according to the maxim Falsa demonstratio non nocet (t). Thus, where a plaintiff at the request of the defendant accepts a bill of exchange, and the defendant agrees Wheatcroft* (1878), 9 Ch. D. 223, the defence that personal consideration entered into the contract failed; see ibid., at p. 230.

An ambiguity of this kind is called a latent ambiguity (Smith v. Jeffries, supra).

(r) And as to the necessity of consensus ad idem to the formation of a contract, see, generally, title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 354.

(s) Hodges v. Horsfall (1829), 1 Russ. & M. 116 (where specific performance of an agreement, referring to a plan as an existing document, forming a term of the contract, was refused, on the ground that the evidence adduced for the purpose of identifying the plan did not show that the parties had agreed upon any particular plan); Raffles v. Wichelhaus (1864), 2 H. & C. 906 (where in an action for breach of contract in not accepting Surat cotton, which the defendant bought of the plaintiff to arrive “ex Peerless from Bombay,” the defence that the defendant meant a ship called the Peerless which sailed from Bombay in October, and that the plaintiff was not ready to deliver any cotton which arrived by that ship, but only cotton which arrived by another ship called the Peerless which sailed from Bombay in December, was held to be a good defence); Smidt v. Tiden (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 446 (where a bill of lading, being ambiguous and equally capable of being applied to one charterparty as to another charterparty, and each party being ignorant of what was in the mind of the other, was held not to be a contract or evidence of a contract between the parties); and see Falck v. Williams, [1900] A. C. 176, P. C. (ambiguous telegram); Swaissland v. Dearsley (1861), 29 Beav. 430.

(t) See Cowen v. Truefitt, Ltd., [1899] 2 Ch. 309, 311, 312, C. A.; and titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 518; DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., pp. 465 et seq.; INSURANCE, Vol. XVII., p. 362. Many cases of false demonstration have reference to the construction of wills, as to which see title WILLS. This doctrine is not confined to cases where the first part of the description is true and the latter untrue, but it is immaterial in what part of the description the falsa demonstratio occurs (Cowen v. Truefitt, Ltd., supra).

to indemnify him as to half of the amount, it is immaterial that by mistake the bill of exchange is misdescribed as being of the same date as the indemnity, whereas in fact it is dated the next day, if the surrounding circumstances are sufficient to identify the subject-matter of the contract (a).

12. The above maxim only applies, however, to cases where the false demonstration is added to that which was sufficiently certain before (b), and therefore, if the words in question form an essential part of the description of the subject-matter, they cannot be rejected as falsa demonstratio (c). So, too, it seems, the doctrine is not applicable when the court can see from evidence outside the instrument what it was that the parties really did mean by the particular document in question (d).

SUB-SECT. 2.—When the Contract is Clear.

13. When the contract is clear the mistake of one party only will not, as a general rule, prevent the formation of a contract and consequent liability in damages being incurred for non-performance, for if a man will not take reasonable care to ascertain what he is contracting about, he must take the consequences (e). Even if the mistake is such as a reasonably diligent man might fall into, a party cannot successfully resist an action for damages, nor, as a rule, specific performance, by a simple statement that he has made a mistake where there has been no misrepresentation and where there is no ambiguity in the terms of the contract (f).

SUB-SECT. 1.—As to its Existence.

14. Where an agreement has been entered into in contemplation of a supposed actual state of things and it turns out that the parties were mutually mistaken and that such supposed state of things did not exist, the agreement is void (g).

SECT. 3.
Mistake as to the Identity of the Subject-matter of the Transaction.

Cases to which doctrine does not apply.

Mistake of one party when contract is clear.

Mutual mistake as avoiding contract.

P. 107 (where, in an agreement for transfer by the plaintiff of a public-house, the subject-matter of the contract was described as "the house and premises he now occupies, known by the sign of the White Hart," but a coach-house which belonged to the White Hart was not, in fact, in the plaintiff's occupation, being in the occupation of a tenant, and it was held that the words "he now occupies" formed an essential part of the description of the subject-matter, and could not be rejected as falsa demonstratio).

As to cases in which the purchaser thinks that he is purchasing something different from what was intended to be sold by the vendor, see p. 10, post.

SECT. 4.

Mistake of Fact etc.

Examples of rule.

Thus, in the case of a contract for the sale of a cargo supposed to exist and to be capable of transfer, but which has in fact been sold and delivered to others before the contract is made, the vendor cannot recover the price of the cargo (h). So also when an annuity is sold after and in ignorance of the fact that it has ceased to exist, the purchase-money may be recovered back as having been paid without consideration (i); and where a fund is held in trust for two persons equally, if living, with benefit of survivorship between them, and one of them sells his reversionary interest, the other being dead at the time, and that fact is not known to the vendor or the purchaser, the sale cannot stand (k). Similarly, if a premium is paid and accepted for the renewal of a policy after the death of the insured, though both parties are ignorant of the fact of his death, the payment does not in such circumstances revive the policy (l); and where a contract for the sale of a policy on the life of a man who is dead is entered into by both parties, in the belief that the assured is alive, and is completed by assignment, the transaction will be set aside (m).

Examples of non-application of rule.

15. When, however, the contract is for the sale of the subject thereof absolutely and not with reference to any collateral circumstances the agreement is binding, notwithstanding that the subject-matter is not in the condition supposed (n); and where a bargain is entered into, which depends upon a contingent event, of which chance both the parties are aware (o), or is for the sale of an uncertain speculative property (p), neither party will be discharged from his contract merely because the event turns out against him or the reality is different from what was expected.

SUB-SECT. 2.—As to its Qualities.

SECT. 4.

Mistake of Fact etc.

16. A mistake, common to both parties, as to the material of which the subject-matter of an agreement is composed may make the agreement void, when the difference between the actual thing and the thing contracted for amounts to a difference in kind (q); so where by the mistake of a common agent of both parties a vendor and purchaser agree to sell and buy different qualities of the same material, there is no binding contract (r). But a sale of goods on the footing of their being of a certain quality will not be set aside at the instance of the party who caused the mistake (s).

Difference in quality which gives rise to relief.

Mutual mistake.

17. A mistake on the part of one party only, not caused or actively assisted by the act of the other party as to the quality of the subject-matter of an agreement, does not, as a rule, invalidate the agreement (t), even if the other party knows of the mistake and that, but for the mistake, the contract would not have been entered into (a). If, however, the other party contributed to the mistake (b), or if he knew that the party making the mistake believed that the agreement was entered into on the footing that the subject-matter had the particular quality (c), the agreement is not binding.

SUB-SECT. 3.—As to its Quantity or Extent.

18. A material error as to the quantity or extent of the thing contracted for may make an agreement void if the mistake is common to both parties (d). But after a conveyance on sale the vendor cannot obtain relief on the ground that the property sold turns out to be more valuable than both parties supposed (e). Nor,

Mistake, if common, may give rise to relief.

(e) Okill v. Whittaker (1847), 2 Ph. 338; see Howkins v. Jackson (1850), 2 Mac. & G. 372. But in the case of releases and documents of that kind it has always been a rule of the court to construe them with regard to the intention of the parties, and to refer in such cases to the state of the property which was known at the time (Turner v. Turner, Hall v. Turner (1880), 14 Ch. D. 829, per MALINS, V.-C., at p. 836, distinguishing Howkins v. Jackson, supra; and see in the absence of express contract, can compensation be claimed after conveyance in respect of a defect in title as to which there was a mutual mistake, and which defect might have been discovered by the plaintiff if he had exercised due diligence (f). Where, however, by the mistake of the joint agent of the parties, too much land is comprised in a conveyance, compensation may be given (g). Where one party bonâ fide thinks that he has purchased what the other party thinks he has not sold, the court may set the agreement aside (h), or refuse a specific performance (i), or, where rectification is sought, put the defendant to election between rescission or rectification in accordance with the plaintiff's view (k).

SUB-SECT. 4.—As to its Price or Consideration.

No relief on mere ground of mistake as to price.

19. In the absence of evidence that one party to a contract is attempting to take advantage of a manifest mistake, the other party cannot avoid the contract on the mere ground of mistake as to the price stated therein (l); though in some cases specific performance may be refused, for example, where a defendant inserts a wrong figure in a letter written by him and containing an offer to sell, and on becoming aware of his error immediately gives notice of it (m).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Compromises and Family Arrangements.

General rule as to binding effect.

20. If a compromise or family arrangement, with a view to avoiding litigation or terminating disputes, has been fairly entered into without concealment or imposition upon either side, and with no suppression of what is true nor suggestion of what is false, then, although the parties may have greatly misunderstood the situation and mistaken their rights, the court will not disturb the arrangement (n).

SECT. 4.
Mistake of Fact etc.

To render a compromise or family arrangement binding, however, there must be honest disclosure by each party to the other of all such material facts known to him, relative to the rights and title of either, as are calculated to influence the judgment in the adoption of the compromise, and any advantage taken by either of the parties of the known ignorance of the other of such facts will render the agreement void in equity and liable to be set aside (o).

Honest
essential.

Equity will also relieve a party who in ignorance of a plain and settled principle of law is induced to give up a portion of his indisputable property to another under the name of a compromise (p). So, too, relief will be granted where parties, being ignorant of facts on which their rights depend or erroneously assuming that they know their rights, deal with the property accordingly and not upon the principle of compromising doubts (q); and a compromise based upon a mutual mistake of account inducing the compromise will also be set aside (r).

Cases where
mistake is

Part IV.—Mistake in the Expression of Consent to a Transaction.

SECT 1.—Remedy by Rectification or Rescission.

21. Where there exists a real common intention between the parties to a transaction, but mistake occurs in the expression of that intention, the court may correct the mistake in order to give

Sprye*, Sprye v. Reynell (1849), 8 Hare, 222, 257; see also Scott v. Scott (1847), 11 I. Eq. R. 74, 96. But mere silence as regards a material fact which one party is not bound to disclose to the other is not a ground for rescission nor a defence to specific performance (Turner v. Green, [1895] 2 Ch. 205). A compromise sanctioned by the court on behalf of an infant cannot be set aside by him on any ground which would be insufficient to set aside a compromise between persons sui juris. Whether it can always be set aside on grounds which as between parties sui juris would be sufficient, quære. In no case can a compromise be set aside unless there has been, on the part of the person claiming to uphold it, conduct which in the view of a court of equity amounts to fraud (Brooke v. Mostyn (Lord) (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 373, 416, C. A.). As to consent orders, see title JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, Vol. XVIII., p. 217.

effect to the real intention (s). To justify the court in so doing, it must appear that there has been a mistake common to both the contracting parties, and that the agreement purports to have been expressed in a deed or instrument in a manner contrary to the intention of both (t). The relief given may be either by way of rectification or rescission as the case may require, for in such cases the difference is only one of degree (a). A deed poll may also be rectified on proof that it is not in accordance with the intention of the person who executed it (b).

Equity will also interfere where by mutual mistake a document has been signed which operates in law contrary to the express intention and agreement of both parties (c). There is no distinction in principle between a mistake as to the legal effect of the words used and a mistake in the words themselves, and, therefore, if a solicitor in drawing a deed, through error, either inserts or omits terms contrary to the intention of the parties, or uses words capable of a meaning different from that which the parties intended, relief will be granted (d). So it appears that equity would also relieve if a solicitor innocently misled parties as to the legal effect of a document and they were induced to sign it under a misapprehension of its meaning (e).

22. The principle upon which the court acts in correcting deeds or instruments is that the parties are to be placed in the same position as that in which they would have stood if the error to be corrected had not been committed (f). Thus in a proper case the court will rectify a deed of settlement (g), an appointment (h), a lease (i), a bond (k), a bill of exchange (l), a schedule of quantities annexed to a contract to execute works for a gross sum, purporting to show how the gross sum is made up (m), a policy of insurance (n), and a declaration of shipment under a policy of marine insurance, even after a loss has become known (o).

So, also, where a conveyance is executed purporting to convey a moiety only of real estate, the intention of the parties having been to pass the whole, the deed will be rectified so as to pass the whole (p), and where by common mistake the parcels in a conveyance include more land than was comprised in the written contract, in pursuance of which the conveyance was executed, the court will rectify the conveyance at the suit of the vendor (q). So, too, if a holder of shares has the same or a larger number of shares than those which he professes to transfer, and by mistake

Where, however, in a case between vendor and purchaser, the conveyance is in conformity with the written agreement, evidence is not, it seems, admissible to show that the agreement and the conveyance do not carry out the intention of the parties (Thompson v. Hickman, [1907] 1 Ch. 550; but see the remarks of NEVILLE, J., ibid., at p. 561; Ellis v. Hills etc. (1892), 67 L. T. 287; pp. 21, 25, 26, post).

A conveyance having been executed primâ facie governs the relations between the parties and evidences their contract, but if, for the purpose of showing a mistake in the conveyance, the prior written contract is to be looked at, then all the prior relevant transactions must be looked at and not the contract alone (Ellis v. Hills etc., supra, where Leuty v. Hillas, supra, was distinguished, and where it was held that there was no mistake on the part of the purchaser, and, moreover, that none was satisfactorily proved even on the part of the vendor).

the wrong distinguishing numbers are inserted in the transfer, that will not prevent the shares passing to the transferee. The figures may afterwards be rectified (r).

23. The principles upon which the court acts in rectifying or rescinding instruments do not apply in cases in which the instrument is in accordance with the expressed intention of the parties, and has been prepared with full knowledge of their rights, but the parties have mistaken the way of giving effect to their own intentions correctly expressed in the deed (s).

The court will not rectify an instrument by inserting a term which the parties wished to be a term of the contract, but deliberately omitted in the erroneous belief that it was illegal (t), or that it was unnecessary to insert it (u); and the court will not make a settlement conformable with what is alleged would have been the contract between the parties if all the facts material to be known by them had been present to their minds (a).

24. Mistake in the expression of a contract in writing may also be a ground for refusing specific performance (b).

SECT. 2.—Remedy by Construction.

Relief by

25. Mistakes in instruments are sometimes dealt with by rules of construction (c). Thus, if it is clear on the face of the instrument itself that words have been omitted or inserted by mistake or inadvertence, the words so omitted or inserted will be supplied or struck out by the court as a matter of construction for the purpose of giving effect to the whole of the document (d).

(where an omission was supplied in a deed of settlement); see also p. 20, post. The court will also eliminate a word or phrase in an Act of Parliament if no sensible meaning can be given to it (Stone v. Yeovil Corporation (1876), 1 C. P. Again, as regards covenants, however general the words may be if standing alone, yet if from other covenants in the same deed it is plainly and irresistibly to be inferred that the party could not have intended to use the words in the general sense which they import, the court will limit the operation of the general words (i).

26. In a mortgage not containing a recital of any intention to do more than make a mortgage, the court regards the instrument with an inclination to believe that nothing more was intended than that which was necessary to make the estate a security to the mortgagees for the money advanced (k). The mere form of the reservation of the equity of redemption is not itself sufficient to alter the previous title (l), or to induce the court to depart from this presumption (m). In such a case (where fraud is out of the question) the form is supposed to arise from inaccuracy or mistake, which is to be explained and corrected by the state of the title as it was before the mortgage (n).

Part V.—Relief in Cases of Mistake.

SECT. 1.

When Relief will be Granted.

General rule as to proof.

Misconception.

Forgetfulness.

Wilful ignorance.

Effect of acquiescence.

SECT. 1.—When Relief will be Granted.

27. In order that a mistake may be a ground for legal remedy, the party who pleads it as a reason why the ordinary consequences of his act should not obtain must be able to show that his conduct has been determined by the mistake (o), and also that the mistake is of such a character as to affect the substance of the transaction (a).

28. The court will grant relief when the mistake was due to ignorance (b), notwithstanding that the party alleging the mistake had the means of knowing the facts (c). The court will also grant relief when the mistake was due to misconception (d), and in some cases when it was due to forgetfulness (e).

But the court will not interfere in favour of a man who is wilfully ignorant of what he ought to know, or, in other words, who commits a mistake without exercising the due diligence which the law would expect of a reasonable and careful person (f), nor will relief be granted when the ignorance was due to the negligence of the party's legal adviser (g).

When a common mistake has been acted upon for a long period, one of the parties may be deprived of any right to relief by his acquiescence (h).

29. The court may refuse to rescind or rectify an instrument where the result would be to affect prejudicially the interest which third parties have acquired on the assumption that the instrument as it stood was good. The court may, therefore, refuse to interfere where interference would prejudice a purchaser for full value (i) or an incumbrancer (k), or where it is impossible to restore the parties to substantially their original position (l), though relief would not be denied in a proper case where it is merely difficult to restore the parties to their original condition (m).

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

30. The relief to be granted in case of mistake may be:— (1) rescission (n), (2) rectification (o), (3) application of the rules of construction of documents (p), (4) refusal of specific performance or of damages for breach of contract (q), (5) recovery of money paid under mistake (r), or (6) opening of settled accounts (s).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Rescission.

31. Where two parties contract (t) under a mutual mistake of fact, the agreement is liable to be set aside at the suit of either party as having proceeded upon a common mistake (u), but in determining whether relief should be given, the nature of the mistake and the cause of it must be considered (x). So, also, where the parties understand the contract in different senses, it may be set aside (a).

unilateral
only.

Unilateral
where parties
position.

32. Where the mistake is unilateral only, rescission may be granted if the mistake is of a fundamental character (b), but not when it is as to a collateral term only (c). The mistake must also be as to a fact, for, as a general rule, the mistake of one party only as to the meaning of the words used in a contract does not afford a ground for relief (d) unless it can be shown that the mistake has been induced, however innocently (e), by some act on the part of the other party (f).

33. The court will sometimes intervene and grant relief in cases in which one party to a transaction is mistaken as to his rights and such mistake is perceived by the other party thereto and taken advantage of by him (g), especially when the transaction is between a parent and a child who has just come of age (h), or when the person labouring under the mistake is in pecuniary difficulties (i). Liability under an instrument which has been delivered up to be cancelled may be enforced, when it can be shown that the instrument was delivered up under the ignorance of one party and with the knowledge of the other party that the liability was enforceable (k).

Hughes* (1855), 1 K. & J. 443, 449 (where a widow, shortly after her husband's death, believing she was liable on a promissory note signed by her late husband and herself, signed a new promissory note, and it was held that such note was invalid); *Broughton v. 34. Where a party executes a release in ignorance of his right, especially if his right is concealed from him by the person to whom the release is made, the release may be set aside (l). So a release to a trustee may be set aside after the lapse of twenty years and after the death of the trustee on evidence that it was executed in error, and in such case it is unnecessary to prove fraud (m).

SECT. 2.

Releases.

35. After conveyance, rescission cannot, in the absence of fraud, be obtained on the ground of unilateral mistake (n). But when a mutual mistake of a fundamental character is proved, the court may, in a proper case, grant rescission even after conveyance (o). The general rule, however, is that in the absence of such a mutual error (p), after the conveyance has been executed, a purchaser has no remedy by way of rescission or compensation in respect of any defects, either in the title to or quantity or quality of the estate, which are not covered by the vendor's covenant (q), or by collateral warranty as to the quality of the subject-matter of the transaction (r). Thus, where a tenant for life sells property, and after conveyance it is found that the property is subject to a reversionary lease granted by a predecessor in title, of which all parties were ignorant, that fact will not afford a ground for rescission (s).

after conveyance.

36. The court will, in a proper case, set aside a voluntary deed executed for the purpose of carrying out trusts declared by parol, but which is wholly inconsistent with those trusts (u), or a deed which does not carry out the full arrangement, even after the death of the grantee (b) or of both the donor and donee (c). So, also, a voluntary gift made under a mistake of fact may be set aside in a proper case (d). The court, moreover, has power to rectify a deed by setting aside a part of it only and allowing the remainder to stand, if the grantor agrees that such part of the deed ought to stand (e). But mistakes which the court might rectify, if so desired by the donor, may not be sufficiently fundamental to enable the donor to set the whole deed aside as failing in substance to carry out his intention (f).

proof.

Where a voluntary deed is impeached, the burden of supporting it does not necessarily rest upon those who set it up (g).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Rectification.

mistake only.

37. Rectification can only be had if the mistake is mutual or common to all parties to the instrument (h). Where the mistake is unilateral only, the proper remedy, if any, is rescission, not rectification (i). But the court may, it seems, in special cases put the defendant to the option of either having the whole transaction set aside or of submitting to have the instrument rectified and altered according to the plaintiff's prayer (k).

Platt*, supra, per FARWELL, J., at p. 623, Garrard v. Frankel, supra, Harris v. Pepperell, supra, and Paget v. Marshall, supra, can only be supported on the ground of fraud, being cases of rescission after conveyance; and it seems from May v. Platt, supra, that vendors and purchasers of land cannot, after conveyance, be put to their election to rescind or accept rectification on the ground of unilateral mistake in the absence of fraud. Garrard v. Frankel, supra, Harris v. Pepperell, supra, and Paget v. Marshall, supra, are treated as anomalous by Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK (see Pollock, Principles of Contract, 8th ed., pp. 506, 552), who thus states their principle: "The court will not hold the plaintiff bound by the defendant's acceptance of an offer which did not express the plaintiff's real intention, and which the defendant could not in the circumstances have reasonably supposed to express it; nor yet require the defendant to accept the real offer which was never effectually communicated to him, and which he perhaps would not have consented to accept: but will put the parties in the same position as if the original offer were still open." These decisions are also criticised unfavourably by Mr. Cyprian

38. It seems that the court is less willing to rectify an instrument where the party seeking relief is the person who prepared and perfected it (l), but in a proper case the court will not, on this account, refuse to grant relief (m), though it may refuse to give him his costs (n).

SECT. 2.
Different Kinds of Relief.

Relief to party who prepared the instrument.

39. It is always necessary to show that there was an actual concluded contract antecedent to the instrument which is sought to be rectified, and that such contract is inaccurately represented in the instrument (o). Thus an instrument as to which no contract has been entered into will not be rectified so as to prevent it having a legal effect which was not contemplated by the parties (p).

Necessity for contract leading to instrument to be rectified.

So, also, there cannot be rectification where one of the contracting parties to the instrument never heard of what is said to be the real agreement (q), or where the parties were mutually mistaken as to a matter which formed the basis of the deed and the agreement on which it was founded (r).

Although where a written contract is followed by a conveyance the conveyance may, on the ground of common mistake, be rectified so as to correspond with the contract (s), yet when the two documents as executed correspond, common mistake will not, it seems, be sufficient ground for rectifying both (a).

Contract and conveyance cannot both be rectified.

40. To justify the court in correcting a mistake in an instrument the evidence must be clear and unambiguous, not only that Necessity for continuity of intention.

(q) Fowler v. Scottish Equitable Life Insurance Society, supra. In this case the original agreement for a policy was made by the plaintiffs with an agent, but different terms were sent to the principals, and the court declared that the policy in question was not binding on either the plaintiffs or defendants (the principals), and ordered the defendants to repay the premiums and the plaintiffs thereupon to deliver up the policy. Compare Mackenzie v. Coulson, supra, at p. 375; Haymen v. Gover (1872), 25 L. T. 903.

Hickman*, [1907] 1 Ch. 550, where NEVILLE, J., at p. 561, said that the law was as stated in the text, but that he had great difficulty in following the reasoning on which the cases appear to be based. The above decisions were founded on the old equitable rule that the court would not grant specific performance of a written contract with parol variation; but quære whether that rule should still prevail since the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 24(7); see Olley v. Fisher (1886), 34 Ch. D. 367; Shrewsbury and Talbot Cab and Noiseless Tyre Co. v. Shaw (1890), 89 L. T. Jo. 274; title SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE; and note (l), p. 26, post.

a mistake has been made (b), but that the alleged intention, to which it is desired that the instrument should be made conformable, continued concurrently in the minds of all the parties down to the time of the execution of the instrument (c). Thus the court will not add to a settlement a power which the plaintiff states that he intended to be added, but to his knowledge was not contained therein when he executed it (d); nor will the court supply a provision which the evidence shows was intentionally omitted (e).

correct form.

41. The party seeking to rectify must also be able to show precisely the form to which the deed ought to be altered (f).

contracts.

42. There is no settled rule in equity that every contract which is in terms joint, and would be so construed at law, is to be treated in equity as joint and several so as to be binding on the estate of a deceased covenantor (g). In such case, therefore, in the absence of any evidence that a deed (h) or cheque (i) was drawn in a form different from that which was the intention of the parties, or that there was any agreement for a covenant of a different sort, there is no ground for imputing a mistake and rectifying the instrument, so as to make it joint and several (k). If, however, there is a reasonable presumption that the instrument was made joint instead of joint and several either through fraud or for want of skill (l), or, although intended to be joint and several, was by mistake drawn in the form of a joint liability (m), relief may be granted on equitable grounds, but the court will not rectify joint covenants in a lease by making them joint and several (n).

43. In the case of a marriage settlement where a post-nuptial settlement differs from articles entered into before marriage, the court would apparently always set up the articles (o); and so also, when an ante-nuptial settlement purports to be in pursuance of articles entered into before marriage and there is any variance, no evidence beyond the articles is necessary in order to have the settlement rectified. And even when the settlement contains no reference to the articles, yet if it can be shown that the settlement was intended to be in conformity with the articles, and there is clear and satisfactory evidence showing that the discrepancy has arisen from mistake, the court will reform the settlement and make it conformable to the real intention of the parties (p). Moreover, the court looks at the intention rather than the actual words of the articles, and where a post-nuptial (q) or an ante-nuptial (r) settlement purports to be made in pursuance of ante-nuptial articles, then though the limitations of the settlement may agree with the words of the articles, still if it does not carry out the intent, the court will reform it.

Where the husband undertakes the duty of having the marriage settlement prepared, but does not carry out the intention of the wife, the settlement may in some cases be rectified so as to accord with that intention (s).

44. A voluntary settlement as well as a settlement for value may be reformed or rectified in a proper case (t), but a voluntary deed which fails to carry out the intention of the parties can only be modified to suit former intentions if the donor consents to make a new and distinct instrument (a). A grantor may make a fresh deed and, with the consent of the grantee, cancel the old one, but he cannot be compelled to alter the grant, and if the grantor contests it, the deed must stand or fall in its actual condition without

The doctrine of the court to be collected from the earlier cases was that when the articles and settlement were both before marriage the court would not interfere unless the settlement was expressed to be made in pursuance of the articles, for without such a recital the court supposed that the parties had altered their intention (Bold v. Hutchinson, supra, per Lord CRANWORTH, L.C., at pp. 566, 567, 568), but the later authorities have put the matter on the true footing, i.e., that if it is perfectly palpable that there has been a mistake on which the settlement has been made, the court will admit evidence to correct it (ibid., at p. 569).

alteration (b). No amount of evidence, however conclusive, proving that the grantor did intend otherwise than as expressed in the deed, will justify the court in compelling him to introduce a clause into the deed which he does not choose to introduce, although he might originally have wished to have done so (c).

On the other hand, the court will hesitate to rectify a voluntary settlement at the instance of the settlor merely on his own evidence as to his intention, unsupported by other evidence such as written instructions, even though the rectification sought would bring the settlement more into harmony with recognised precedents and what the settlor might reasonably have intended at the time (d).

A volunteer is, however, entitled to take proceedings to have an error in a settlement rectified (e), even though the effect would be to carry back the settled fund to the original settlor (f), but the court will only act upon the clearest and most certain demonstration of error and of actual intention (g).

45. It is no objection to the exercise by the court of its jurisdiction that a settlement was made in pursuance of an order of the court (h), or that a resettlement has been enrolled (i) as a disentailing assurance (k).

Nor is the fact that a provision, such as a clause restraining anticipation, is a most proper one, and one usually inserted in marriage settlements directed by the court, a ground for refusing to rectify the settlement by striking such provision out, when it is shown that its insertion defeats the intention (l).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Defence to an Action for Specific Performance or Damages.

46. Mistake may be a ground for refusing specific performance of a contract, either where the mistake is in the expression of the contract in writing (m), or where the mistake is one of fact and made by the defendant only (n). In a case of the latter kind, however, there must have been reasonable excuse for the mistake (o), and the plaintiff may be given the option either of having a decree for specific performance in accordance with the view of the defendant or of having his action dismissed (p).

(d) Bonhote v. Henderson, [1895] 1 Ch. 742; affirmed, [1895] 2 Ch. 202, C. A.; and see p. 19, ante. A voluntary settlement is not voidable by the settlor merely because it does not contain a power of revocation (Henry v. Armstrong (1881), 18 Ch. D. 668). See James v. Couchman (1885), 29 Ch. D. 212 (where a settlement was rectified).

47. Mistake may also be a good defence to an action for damages for breach of contract (q). But where the plaintiff has been deceived, by the reasonable reading of the contract, as to what was the defendant's meaning, it is no defence for the latter in an action for damages for breach of contract to set up that he meant something different to such reasonable reading (r). Even when specific performance is refused on the ground of mistake the court may give the same damages as would, under the old practice, have been given in a court of law (s).

Thus, at common law, if an agreement is unambiguous, parol evidence as to the intention of the parties with a view to showing that some term or word has been inserted or omitted by mistake is inadmissible (a), though parol evidence may be received for the purpose of explaining what the parties to an agreement meant when there is a latent ambiguity (b) in the agreement (c).

49. In equity, however, parol evidence is admissible to make out a case for rectification or rescission of an instrument (d), or to show that what purports to be an agreement is not in fact an agreement at all, as, for example, where it has been signed by mistake (e). In

Cas. 40, 66; and as to deeds, see title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 453). such cases the evidence is admissible, not to contradict what appears on the face of the agreement, a procedure the court will not allow, but to prove the existence of a mistake which could not otherwise be proved (f). So, also, where mistake cannot be established without evidence, equity will allow a defendant in an action for specific performance to support a defence founded on mistake by evidence dehors the agreement (g), the evidence being introduced, not to explain nor alter the agreement, but, consistently with its terms, to show circumstances of mistake or surprise which would make the specific performance of the contract as executed unjust (h).

50. Parol evidence is admissible to make out a case for the rectification of an instrument (i), notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds (k).

51. If there is a previous agreement in writing, which is unambiguous, the instrument will be reformed in accordance therewith, and if such agreement is ambiguous, parol evidence may be used to explain it according to the ordinary rules in cases of ambiguity (l). If, however, the previous agreement in writing is clear, and the instrument is in accordance therewith, parol evidence is not admissible to rectify the latter (m).

52. The court is, however, always unwilling to vary a settlement when the effect would be to defeat vested rights, or where it is sought to do so on mere parol evidence (n). If there is nothing but the recollection of the witnesses, and the defendant, by his answer, denies the case set up by the plaintiff, the plaintiff may be without remedy (o). Horne* (1844), 3 Hare, 276, 278). But, though a defendant resisting specific performance may go into parol evidence to show that by mistake the written agreement does not express the real terms, it appears from the older authorities that the plaintiff could not do so for the purpose of obtaining specific performance with a variation; see note (a), p. 21, ante, and title SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

correcting a deed by parol evidence when there is anything in writing beyond the parol evidence (p); and, although, in nearly all cases in which the court has reformed a settlement, there has been something beyond the parol evidence, such, for instance, as the instructions for preparing the conveyance or a note by the attorney and the mistake has been properly accounted for (q), yet a mistake may be rectified where it is clearly proved by parol evidence, even though there is nothing in writing to which the parol evidence may attach (r). So, also, notwithstanding the absence of any evidence of intention, apart from the settlement itself and the fact that the instructions from which it was prepared are not forthcoming and that the solicitor who prepared it and the parties to it are dead, the deed itself may afford sufficient evidence of the intention to enable the court to rectify the mistake (s).

The court can order rectification (t) or rescission (a) on the ground of mistake upon the evidence of the plaintiff alone, where no further evidence can be obtained; but it requires very clear and distinct evidence in such a case that there was a different intention when the deed was executed (b).

The dividend before sale was paid by the company to the clients direct. The brokers subsequently paid to the clients the proceeds of sale, including, under protest, an amount attributable to dividend, to enable them to meet their obligations, and it was or limitations hereafter referred to (i). Where money is paid voluntarily with full knowledge of the facts, and there is no mala fides, it cannot be recovered (k).

56. The mistake may consist in the payer never having known the real facts, or in his forgetfulness of facts of which he once had full knowledge (l). The possession of the means of knowledge of which the party does not avail himself necessarily does not prevent the application of the rule if the money was in fact paid under a real mistake (m), although such possession is strong evidence from which it may be inferred that the party had actual knowledge of the circumstances (a).

57. If money is paid under the impression that a certain state of circumstances is true when in reality the facts are otherwise, it may, generally speaking, be recovered back, however careless the payer may have been in omitting to use due diligence in making inquiries. If, however, the money is intentionally paid without reference to the truth or falsehood of the matters, the payer meaning to waive all inquiry into them, and intending that the person receiving the money shall have it at all events, it cannot subsequently be recovered (b). But it is not enough that the means of acquiring accurate knowledge existed; the party must practically have waived all inquiry (c).

58. The mistake must be a mistake as to a material fact, that is, it must relate to a fact which, if true, would have rendered the party under the mistake liable to pay the money, and not merely as to a fact which, if true, would have rendered it desirable that he should pay it (d).

59. The mistake must not only be as to some fact affecting the liability to pay, but it must also be a mistake between the party paying and the party receiving the money. If the fact about which the mistake exists has nothing to do with the payee, the rule does not apply (e). Furthermore, the mistake must be that of the held that they were not entitled to recover the amount so attributable to dividend from their clients; the fact that the payment is made in connection with a bet seems to be immaterial (Gasson v. Cole (1910), 26 T. L. R. 468).

person who paid the money, and not of another person on whose mistake he thought fit to act (f).

60. Where the defendant relies on the Statute of Limitation (g), the statute runs from the date of payment and not from the date of the discovery of the mistake, nor from the date when the plaintiff might have discovered it with the exercise of reasonable diligence (h).

61. Where there has been neglect or misconduct on the plaintiff's part, he may be prevented from recovering by the fact that the defendant will be placed in a worse position than if the money had not been paid (i); but where there has been no neglect or misconduct, this fact affords no defence (k).

Again, if some mutual relation exists between the parties which creates a duty on the part of the plaintiff towards the defendant, breach of such duty will disentitle him to recover (l); but if no such duty is cast upon the plaintiff, mere delay in discovering the mistake is not laches on his part, and he may nevertheless recover the money paid by him under a mistake of fact (m).

62. Where money is paid by one party to another under a mistake of fact of which the payee alone was ignorant, a demand for payment must be made before action, because, until such demand, there can be no duty on the part of the payee to pay the money over (n); but where the mistake is common to both parties no such demand is necessary (o).

63. It is not necessary that money should have been actually paid. The same rules also apply where the money has only been allowed in account (p).

SECT. 1.

Money Paid Voluntarily under a
Fact.

Circumstances sufficient to entitle party to reopen account.

Where accounts between two parties are shown to be erroneous to a considerable extent both in amount and in the number of items (q), or where there is a fiduciary relationship (r), and a less considerable number of errors are shown (s), or where the fiduciary relation exists and one or more fraudulent omissions or insertions in the accounts are shown (t), the court will open the account (a), and not merely surcharge and falsify (b). But, where there has been a long lapse of time and loss of books and documents, the court may decline to open the accounts altogether and give liberty to surcharge and falsify only, notwithstanding that numerous and important errors in the account are proved (c).

No right to recover as a general rule.

64. Money paid voluntarily (d) with a full knowledge of the facts is not, as a general rule, recoverable merely upon the ground that it was paid under a mistake as to the law or as to the legal

But the giving of a negotiable instrument is for this purpose equivalent to the payment of money (Coward v. Hughes (1833), 1 K. & J. 443).

(q) A single error may, however, be sufficient to justify the court in opening an account (Taylor v. Haylin (1788), 2 Bro. C. C. 310; Johnson v. Curtis (1791), 3 Bro. C. C. 266; Coleman v. Mellersh (1850), 2 Mac. & G. 309; Pritt v. Clay (1843), 6 Beav. 503; see Daniell v. Sinclair (1881), 6 App. Cas. 181, P. C.). As to accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee, see title MORTGAGE, pp. 215 et seq., post. As to accounts between personal representatives and trustees and beneficiaries, see titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., pp. 320, 338 et seq.; TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

(r) See Cheese v. Keen, [1908] 1 Ch. 245, per NEVILLE, J., at p. 251; Re Webb, Lambert v. Still, [1894] 1 Ch. 73, 84, C. A. As to the time within which the party seeking to open or set aside the account must assert his right, and generally as to when a fiduciary relationship exists, see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 358; EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 16–18; FRAUDULENT AND VOIDABLE CONVEYANCES, Vol. XV., p. 107; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., p. 170; SOLICITORS.

(t) Where the single error complained of is a fraudulent item the proper course is to open the accounts altogether (Alfrey v. Alfrey (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 87, followed in Williamson v. Barbour (1877), 9 Ch. D. 529, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 533, and Gething v. Keighley (1878), 9 Ch. D. 547, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 550), but, except in the case of fraud, where there is a single error the court will not order the whole accounts to be opened, but will decree that the plaintiff be at liberty to surcharge and falsify.

(a) How far the court will open accounts, upon the proof of error appearing in some, but not all of them, must depend upon the circumstances of the particular case, and if such circumstances lead to the inference that the errors proved in some cases may be expected to appear in all, relief will be given in respect of all (Cheese v. Keen, [1908] 1 Ch. 245, per NEVILLE, J., at p. 251); see also Coleman v. Mellersh (1850), 2 Mac. & G. 309, 334; and see as to opening accounts stated, title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 490.

(c) Millar v. Craig (1843), 6 Beav. 433.

(d) A payment of duty not exigible, e.g. for male servants, is a voluntary payment (Whiteley, Ltd. v. R. (1910), 101 L. T. Jo. 741). As to the payment of money under compulsion of legal process, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 468; for money paid for an illegal consideration, see ibid., p. 409; as to money paid under duress, see ibid., p. 478; and as to money paid under an erroneous construction of a will, see title WILLS. effect of the circumstances under which it was paid (e). Nor can sums allowed in account under a mistaken view as to the plaintiff's rights be recovered (f), and where a party accepts a sum as a composition for his debt of a larger sum under a mistake of law he cannot subsequently sue the defendant for the balance of the debt (g).

65. Where money is paid at a time when the law is in favour of the payee, it cannot be recovered by reason of a subsequent judicial decision reversing the former understanding of the law (h).

The general rule does not apply as against a principal where a payment has been made by an agent who, to the knowledge of the payer, had no authority to make it (i).

66. Where money is ordered to be paid out of court to a person apparently but not really entitled, and the Paymaster-General obeys the order, then, except possibly in cases where the order was obtained by fraud or forgery, the person really entitled, though not before the court when the order was made, has no claim on the Consolidated Fund under the Court of Chancery (Funds) Act, 1872 (k).

67. The rule that money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered is not, however, absolute.

Thus, where in the particular circumstances of the case there is any ground which makes it inequitable that the party who received the money should retain it, the court will sometimes give relief against mistakes in law as well as against mistakes of fact (l). So where the payee, knowing the law himself and knowing that the payer is ignorant of the law and would not pay if he were not so, is an accessory to the payment by the payer, for example, by getting some person to misinform the payer of the law, and obtains the payment from him by these means, he may not be allowed to benefit by his mala fides (m).

68. Although no action will lie for the recovery of money paid under a mistake of law to an officer of the court, the court will order it to be repaid (n), provided that no injury will be done to anyone or the rights of others interfered with (o). But payment of money into court in ignorance of the legal consequences does not amount to the kind of mistake for which equity will give relief (p).

69. Relief in respect of a payment under a mistake of law has never been given in the case of a simple money demand by one person against another, there being no fiduciary relation between them and no supervening equity by reason of the conduct of either of the parties (q).

70. Where accounts are drawn up and assented to by parties under a common mistake as to their rights and obligations, the accounts may be directed to be opened (r).

Brown* (1886), 32 Ch. D. 597 (trustee in liquidation); Re Rhoades, Ex parte Rhoades, [1899] 2 Q. B. 347, C. A. (official receiver); Re Tyler, Ex parte Official Receiver, [1907] 1 K. B. 865, C. A. (official receiver). This rule does not, however, apply where the officer of the court has neither done nor omitted anything which could give rise to the suggestion that he has committed the court to a course which is in any way unworthy of its dignity (Re Hall, Ex parte Official Receiver, [1907] 1 K. B. 875, 879, C. A.; see Tapster v. Ward (1909), 101 L. T. 25). The principle established by Re Condon, Ex parte James, supra, that the court will not allow its officer, the trustee in bankruptcy, to retain money for distribution among the creditors when it would be contrary to fair dealing to do so, is not confined to the case of money paid under a mistake of law, but is of general application (Re Tyler, Ex parte Official Receiver, supra).

(o) Re Carnac, Ex parte Simmonds, supra; Re Opera, Ltd., [1891] 3 Ch. 260, C. A.; see Hand v. Blow, [1901] 2 Ch. 721, 729, 730, C. A. Where a trustee in bankruptcy has divided the money in question among his creditors, but the court sees that there are other moneys to come into his hands and it has not been shown that any injury will be done to anyone, he will be ordered to apply the money which is coming to him in replacing the money divided (Re Carnac, Ex parte Simmonds, supra).

Part I.—Money and Interest on Money.

SECT. 1.—Money.

general.

71. The term "money" is applied to the means whereby the medium of exchange or the comparative values of different commodities is ascertained (a). Such medium may consist of tokens or coins, which, in a narrower sense, are called "money" (b).

(a) See Encyclopædia Britannica, 13th ed., Vol. XVIII., tit. Money, for the modern application of the term. For the meaning of the term in a will, see title WILLS.

(b) In Com. Dig., tit. Money (B. 1), six essential characteristics of money are stated, namely: a fixed weight, alloy, impression, and valuation, the King's authority, and proclamation; citing the Case of Mixt Moneys (1604), Dav. Ir. 18 a, 19 b; see also Vin. Abr., tit. Money, Vol. XV., p. 420. The standard of value in this country is the pound sterling, or sovereign, as to which and as to coinage and currency, see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., pp. 461 et seq. As to paper currency, see ibid., pp. 462, 464; see also title BANKERS AND BANKING, Vol. I., p. 570. As to payment in coin and legal tender, see titles BANKERS AND BANKING, Vol. I., p. 570; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., pp. 461, 462; CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 418 et seq. As to coinage offences, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 514 et seq.

The comparative values above mentioned (c), when reduced to terms of money, constitute, for example, the price of goods sold (d), or the respective values of property exchanged (e), or the compensation for loss or damage sustained (f).

They may express the extent of contractual obligations (g), or may define liabilities the extent of which has been ascertained or determined either by agreement, or by a competent authority or tribunal resorted to, chosen or appointed for the purpose (h).

In the succeeding portions of this title the word "money" is used to denote that form of wealth or credit which is transferred from one person to another by means of coins, bank-notes, cheques and similar instruments.

SECT. 1.

Money.

Money as a defining term.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Definition.

72. Interest, when considered in relation to money, denotes the return or consideration, or compensation (i) for the use or retention by one party of a sum of money or other property belonging to another, and may arise from a loan (k), or investment of money, or as a result of money or property belonging to one party being retained or unrepaid by another (l).

Interest.

SUB-SECT. 2.—When Payable.

73. At common law debts do not, as a general rule, bear interest unless there is an agreement to pay it (m).

Common law rule.

74. Interest, however, is payable in the following cases:—

Statutory right to interest.

(1) Where a right to it, or an authority for its allowance or payment, is conferred by statute (n).

(c) See p. 36, ante.

(f) See title DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 304, 305.

(g) For payment of money in discharge of contractual obligation, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 444; as to appropriation of payments, see ibid., p. 449; as to proof of payment in discharge of a debt, and receipts generally, see ibid., pp. 446, 452 et seq.; as to payment by bill of exchange or cheque, see ibid., p. 447.

(h) See titles ARBITRATION, Vol. I., pp. 468 et seq.; DAMAGES, Vol. X., pp. 304, 328; JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, Vol. XVIII., pp. 209, 219.

(i) For a modern definition of interest, see Encyclopædia Britannica, 13th ed., Vol. XIV., tit. Interest. As to the effect of taking interest on arrears of rent upon the remedy of distress, see title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., p. 153. For the meaning of the term "profits," see Re Spanish Prospecting Co., Ltd., [1911] 1 Ch. 92, 98, 99, C. A.

(k) As to money lent, see pp. 44 et seq., post, and title MORTGAGE, pp. 87, 113 et seq., post.

(l) For example, in the case of principal and agent, see title AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 188; or in the case of legatees, see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 273. As to cases where interest becomes payable by reason of the relation of parties, see p. 40, post.

(n) See pp. 38 et seq., post.

SECT. 2.
Interest on Money.

General rules.

If a debt or sum certain (o) is payable by virtue of a written instrument (p) at a certain time (q), interest may be allowed (r) thereon, to run from that time (s).

Interest, to run from the time of demand, may also be allowed (r) upon all other debts or sums certain (o), if a written demand (a) of payment is made upon the debtor, giving him notice that interest will be claimed from the date of demand until payment (h).

In both cases the interest is payable by way of damages for the non-payment of the debt (c), and the rate allowed must not exceed the current rate of interest (d).

In particular cases.

In addition, a special right to interest is conferred by statute in (o) A sum to be afterwards ascertained is not a "sum certain" (Hill v. South Staffordshire Rail. Co. (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 154), nor is a sum claimed as the balance of an account, which proves to have been miscalculated (Ward v. Eyre (1880), 15 Ch. D. 130, C. A., disapproving on this point Mackintosh v. Great Western Rail. Co. (1865), 4 Giff. 683); but it is sufficient if the exact sum can be computed by arithmetic from materials contained in the contract (London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co. v. South Eastern Rail. Co., [1892] 1 Ch. 120, C. A., per LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 144). A claim may be for a "sum certain," notwithstanding the fact that there is a set-off which may cause a reduction in the amount finally found due (Alexandra Docks and Rail. Co. v. Taff Vale Rail. Co. (1911), 28 T. L. R. 163, C. A.).

(p) The written instrument must be one containing, on the face of it, the contract to pay the debt (Taylor v. Holt (1864), 3 H. & C. 452).

(q) An agreement to pay at a stated period after the happening of a future event is an agreement to pay "at a certain time" if the event is one which must happen, for example, six months after the death of A. (Re Horner, Fooks v. Horner, [1896] 2 Ch. 188); but not if it is a mere contingency, e.g., "one month after my arrival in England" (Page v. Newman (1829), 9 B. & C. 378), or two months after the arrival of a ship (Merchant Shipping Co. v. Armitage (1873), L. R. 9 Q. B. 99, Ex. Ch.; London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co. v. South Eastern Rail. Co., [1892] 1 Ch. 120, C. A.; affirmed, [1893] A. C. 429 (but see the judgment of Lord SHAND, ibid., at p. 443), disapproving Duncombe v. Brighton Club Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 371).

(r) Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), s. 28. The power to award interest is discretionary, and need not be exercised unless the court or jury think fit (ibid.).

(s) Ibid. The statutory provision is said to have been declaratory only of the law previously existing (Webster v. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co. (1880), 15 Ch. D. 169, 173, 178, C. A.). As to the date from which interest will be allowed when a judgment of a court of first instance has been reversed on appeal, see Macbeth & Co. v. Maritime Insurance Co. (1908), 24 T. L. R. 559; see also Douglas v. Forrest (1828), 4 Bing. 686.

(a) A demand made for the first time by the writ in the action is not sufficient (Rhymney Rail. Co. v. Rhymney Iron Co. (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 146, C. A.; see Ryley v. Master, Sheba Gold Mining Co. v. Trubshawe, [1892] 1 Q. B. 674, per Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., at p. 680); nor is a general intimation upon a tradesman's account that interest will be charged after a certain time (Re Lloyd Edwards, Williams v. Trench (1891), 61 L. J. (CH.) 22). For instances of demands held to be sufficient, see Geake v. Ross (1875), 44 L. J. (C. P.) 315; Mowatt v. Londesborough (Lord) (1854), 4 E. & B. 1, Ex. Ch.; Berrington v. Phillips (1836), 1 M. & W. 48; Re Overend, Gurney & Co., Ex parte Lintott (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 184; Edwards v. Great Western Rail. Co. (1851), 11 C. B. 588; and for demands held insufficient, see Ward v. Eyre, supra; Rishton v. Grissell (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 393.

many cases, as, for example, in the administration of bankrupt estates (e); on bills of exchange (f); in the liquidation of companies (g); on purchase-money under the Lands Clauses Acts (h); on death duties (i); on judgments (k); in actions for the value of goods converted or seized (l); on sums due on policies of assurance (m); on sums due between a solicitor and his client (n); on loans for public works (o); on sums due from owners of premises to a local authority for improvement expenses (p); and on sums charged upon land for improvements (q) or paid for redemption of land tax (r).

common law by way of damages for breach of contract (b), such as a contract to give a bill or other security which would itself have borne interest (c), or where the plaintiff's money has been used and interest made upon it (d).

(g) Interest, in certain cases, is payable by the rules of equity.

Equity looks upon that as done which ought to be done (e). Therefore, if the defendant ought to have done something which in law would have entitled the plaintiff to interest, or has wrongfully prevented the plaintiff from doing something which would have so entitled him, the plaintiff may claim interest as though the thing had been done (f).

Money obtained by fraud and retained by fraud can be recovered with interest (g).

Interest may also be recovered in equity in some cases where a particular relationship exists, between the creditor and debtor (h), (1830), 6 Bing. 709; Rhodes v. Rhodes (1860), John. 653; London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co. v. South Eastern Rail. Co., [1893] A. C. 429.

(b) In London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co. v. South Eastern Rail. Co., supra, approving Page v. Newman (1829), 9 B. & C. 378, it was apparently held that interest is only payable in three cases, namely, (1) by statute, (2) by express agreement, or (3) by mercantile custom. But the rule as thus stated is not easy to reconcile with the earlier decision in Cook v. Fowler (1874), L. R. 7 H. L. 27, or with the later case of Re Anglesey (Marquis), Willmot v. Gardner, [1901] 2 Ch. 548, C. A. It is submitted that the rule was not intended to apply to the instances stated in the text, or to cases where an agreement to pay interest can be inferred from the conduct of the parties (see p. 39, ante); and it is assumed that it does not affect the cases where interest is payable by the rules of equity (see the text, infra). But the old principle that interest is payable where there has been long delay, under vexatious and oppressive circumstances, in payment of money due under a contract (Hilhouse v. Davis (1813), 1 M. & S. 169; Arnott v. Redfern (1826), 3 Bing. 353; Marsh v. Jones (1889), 40 Ch. D. 563, C. A.), is apparently no longer law, unless the circumstances of the case bring it within the statute (see p. 38, ante) or one of the rules of equity (see the text, infra). As to interest as damages in admiralty cases, see title ADMIRALTY, Vol. I., p. 120.

(c) Marshall v. Poole (1810), 13 East, 98; Harper v. Williams (1843), 4 Q. B. 219; Farr v. Ward (1837), 3 M. & W. 25; Sutton v. Morgan (1814), 5 Taunt. 758, Ex. Ch.; Lowndes v. Collens (1810), 17 Ves. 27; Davis v. Smyth (1841), 8 M. & W. 399. This proposition, though supported by a number of common law cases, may also be referred to equitable principles, as to which see the text, infra.

(d) Walker v. Constable (1798), 1 Bos. & P. 306; De Havilland v. Bowerbank (1807), 1 Camp. 50; see also Burdick v. Garrick (1870), 5 Ch. App. 233. This proposition also may, perhaps, be referred to equitable principles, as to which see the text, infra.

Great Western Rail. Co.* (1864), 4 Giff. 683; see also Hull and Selby Rail. Co. v. North Eastern Rail. Co. (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 872, C. A.; Rhoades v. Selsey (Lord) (1840), 2 Beav. 359.

R. 1 Exch. 32; but the fraud must be proved in the action in which the interest is sought to be recovered (Johnson v. R., supra); and see title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., p. 745.

(h) In many of these cases interest was payable at common law before such as mortgagor and mortgagee (i); obligor and obligee on a bond (k); executor and beneficiary (l); principal and agent (m); principal and surety (n); trustee and cestui que trust (o); vendor and purchaser (p); or in the case of arrears of annuities (q).

rule (k), barred also (l), and if the debt so barred is paid, the interest thereon does not revive (m).

77. If the principal remains unpaid by reason of the delay of the creditor (n), or from any cause outside the debtor's control (o), interest cannot be claimed.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Rate of Interest.

agreed rate.

78. Since the repeal of the statutes against usury (p), and subject to the statutory power of the court to set aside or vary a transaction where the interest charged is excessive (q), there is no restriction on the terms which may be agreed upon between a borrower and a lender for the payment of interest, and the ordinary principles of the law of contract govern any such agreement. The same rule applies to interest upon other debts.

Amount
allowed.

Where the rate of interest is not fixed by statute, agreement or fixed usage, there is no hard and fast rule as to the amount that will be allowed (r); and the rate may vary according to the practice of the particular court, the value of money for the time being, and the circumstances of the particular case (s). The usual practice, apart from special circumstances, is to allow 5 per cent. in cases where the interest is partly in the nature of a penalty (t), and in commercial and speculative transactions (a), and 3 or 4 per cent. in others (b).

If the circumstances are such that interest ought to be calculated at the commercial rate, and the debt is payable abroad, the rate current at the place of payment will be allowed (c).

SECT. 2.
Money.

79. Where there is a contract for the payment of money on a day certain, with interest at a fixed rate down to that day, and default is made in payment of the principal, the rate of interest mentioned in the contract is the rate usually allowed from the time of default; there is, however, no general rule of law to that effect (d).

Part II.—Loans of Money.

SECT. 1.

Registration of Money- lenders.

Who is a "money-lender."

The business of money-
lending.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Who must Register.

82. Every person (j) (excepting those hereafter specified (k)) whose business is that of money-lending, or who advertises or announces himself or holds himself out as carrying on that business, is a "money-lender" within the meaning of the Money-lenders Acts (l), and must register himself as a "money-lender" in accordance with the statutory regulations made by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue (m).

83. It is a question of fact in each case whether a person is carrying on the business of money-lending (n); and in order to establish that he is carrying on such a business it is not sufficient to prove that he has occasionally lent money at a remunerative rate of interest (o), but it is necessary to prove some degree of system and continuity in his money-lending transactions (p).

(j) "Person" includes individuals, firms, societies, and companies (Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 3 (1), and Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), ss. 1, 2). As to money-lending companies, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 765.

(l) I.e., the Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), and the Money-lenders Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 38), which are to be construed as one (see ibid., s. 3). Such persons are referred to in this title as "money-lenders."

(m) Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), ss. 2 (1) (a), 3 (1), 6. As to the statutory regulations, see pp. 46, 47, post. Persons so registered are referred to in this title as "registered money-lenders."

(n) Kirkwood v. Gadd, [1910] A. C. 422, 424, 428, 431.

(p) Kirkwood v. Gadd, supra, per Lords LOREBURN, L.C., and ATKINSON, at pp. 423, 431; Newton v. Pyke, supra, per WALTON, J., at p. 128. The carrying on of a business implies a repetition of acts, and excludes an isolated transaction (Smith v. Anderson (1880), 15 Ch. D. 247, C. A., per BRETT, L.J., at p. 277; see also Wigfield v. Potter (1881), 45 L. T. 612; Crowther v. Thorley (1884), 32 W. R. 330; Re Siddall (a Person of Unsound Mind) (1885), 29 Ch. D. 1). Thus in Bonnard v. Dott (1905), 21 T. L. R. 491; affirmed, [1906] 1 Ch. 740, C. A. (where the sole business of the lender was the lending of money to company promoters), it was held that the lender ought to have registered himself as a money-lender under the Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51). In considering whether there is a sufficient "system and continuity" in the money-lending transactions, all the loans made by the lender must be taken into account, including loans made in the course of a business which has not for its primary object the lending of money, as to which see p. 45, post (Fagot v. Fine

SUB-SECT. 2.—Exemptions from Registration.

SECT. 1.

Registration of Money-lenders.Persons and bodies exempt from registration.

84. The following persons and bodies are not “money-lenders” within the meaning of the Money-lenders Acts (a).

(1) Pawnbrokers in respect of business carried on by them in accordance with the provisions of the Acts for the time being in force in relation to pawnbrokers (b);

(2) Persons (c) bonâ fide carrying on the business of banking (d);

(3) Persons (c) bonâ fide carrying on the business of insurance (e);

(4) Persons (c) bonâ fide carrying on any business not having for its primary object the lending of money, in the course of which and for the purposes whereof they lend money (f);

(5) Registered societies within the meaning of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (g);

(6) Societies registered or having rules certified under the Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (h), ss. 2 or 4;

(7) Societies registered under the Benefit Building Societies Act, 1836 (i);

(8) Societies registered under the Loan Societies Act, 1840 (j);

(9) Societies registered under the Building Societies Acts, 1874 to 1894 (k);

(10) Bodies corporate, incorporated or empowered by a special Act of Parliament to lend money in accordance with such Act;

(11) Bodies corporate for the time being exempted from registration under the Money-lenders Acts (l), by order of the Board of Trade published pursuant to regulations of the Board of Trade (m).

These persons and bodies are exempted from registration (1911), 105 L. T. 583). Interrogatories may be administered to a person lending money in order to prove “system and continuity” in his business, but not so as to disclose the names of his clients (Nash v. Layton, [1911] 2 Ch. 71, C. A.).

under the Money-lenders Acts (n), and the restrictions imposed thereby with regard to the carrying on of the business of money-lending do not apply to them (o). Loans of money by persons so exempted are governed by the ordinary law (p).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Regulations as to Registration.

Place of registration.

85. Every "money-lender" (q) must register himself (r)—

(1) At an office provided by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue (s);

Particulars to be registered.

(2) Under his own name (t) or his usual trade name (u);

(3) With the address at which he carries on his business of a money-lender; or, if he carries on such business at more than one address, with all the addresses at which he carries on such business (a).

Removal from register.

86. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue have power, on giving proper notice to the "money-lender," to remove his name from the register, and if the registration is improper it is their duty to do so (b), but unless the name is removed from the register the registration is effective for the period of three years from the date thereof (c).

Renewal of registration.

The registration may from time to time be renewed, and, if renewed, is effective for a period of three years from the date of the renewal (c).

(s) The present Registration Office is at Room No. 12, Somerset House, Strand, London. Registration may be effected by post or personal attendance.

(t) A person's "own name" is not necessarily the surname of his father, with (in the case of a Christian) the names given to him at his baptism prefixed thereto; the name by which he is in fact known and described is, it is submitted, his "own name" within the statutory meaning; see title NAME AND ARMS, CHANGE OF, p. 349, post.

(u) "Usual trade name" means a trade name which the money-lender has been using before the date of his registration (Whiteman v. Sadler, [1910] A. C. 514, upholding on this point the decision of the Court of Appeal, Sadler v. Whiteman, [1910] 1 K. B. 868, C. A., and overruling Stirling v. Silburn and Pyman, [1910] 1 K. B. 67). A money-lender cannot adopt a trade name for the purpose of registration. "A disguise which a man assumes for the purpose of concealing his identity cannot be described as his usual attire at the time, even though he means to wear it in future as long as it serves his purpose" (Whiteman v. Sadler, supra, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 519). As to trade names generally, see title TRADE MARKS, TRADE NAMES, AND DESIGNS.

(a) See Staffordshire Financial Co. v. Valentine (1910), 26 T. L. R. 362, C. A. If the business is carried on in more than one part of the United Kingdom a separate registration must be made for each part; see the Regulations referred to in note (f), p. 47, post.

87. No person may be registered as a "money-lender" under any name including the word "bank," or under any name implying that he carries on banking business; and, if any "money-lender" is registered under any such name, the name must be removed from the register and a notification to that effect must be sent to him (d).

Prohibition against registration
as bankers.

Fees on
registration.

88. The fees to be paid on registration and renewal of registration are fixed by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, but must not exceed £1 for each registration or renewal (e).

89. The register of "money-lenders" is kept by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue at Somerset House, and is open to inspection by any person on payment of a fee of 1s. for the inspection of each return on the register (f).

The register.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Penalties for Failure to Register.

90. Any "money-lender" (g) who fails to register himself in accordance with the preceding provisions (h) is liable (i), on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (j), to a fine not exceeding £100, and in the case of a second or subsequent conviction (k) to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding three months or to a fine not exceeding £100, or to both. If the offender is a body corporate, it is liable on a second or subsequent conviction to a fine not exceeding £500.

Penalties for failure to fresh registration is necessary whenever a change occurs either in the "money-lender's" name or in the place or any of the places of business (see p. 47, post); and in the case of a firm or unincorporated society or company, of a change of any kind therein. The carrying on of business at an additional place also entails a fresh registration.

(d) Money-lenders Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 38), s. 2 (1). For the penalty imposed upon "money-lenders" who represent themselves as bankers, see p. 57, post.

For this fee a copy of the return will be supplied if it does not exceed one folio of seventy-two words or figures. If it exceeds this limit a fee of 4d. per folio is charged. The stamped forms for registration and for searching may be purchased at the Chief Registration Office or at the office of any collector of Customs and Excise, or may be ordered through any money order office; but applicants must state whether the registration is (a) of an individual, (b) of a firm or unincorporated society or company, or (c) of an incorporated society or company—seeing that different forms are to be used for each class (Directions issued by the Board of Inland Revenue, November, 1911).

Money by Registered
lenders.

Restrictions on carrying on money-lending business.

91. A "money-lender" (l) is subject to the following statutory restrictions with regard to the carrying on of his money-lending business (m):—

(1) He must carry on such business in his registered name and in no other name and under no other description (n);

(2) He must not enter into an agreement in the course of his business as a money-lender with respect to the advance and repayment of money, nor take any security for money (o) in the course of his business as a money-lender, otherwise than in his registered name (p);

(3) He must carry on such business at his registered address or addresses and at no other address (q);

(4) He is bound, on reasonable request and on tender of a

(m) Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 2 (1) (b), (c), (d). As to the relief of borrowers, see p. 53, post.

(n) A "money-lender" who carries on two registered businesses under different names, one on his own account and the other in partnership with others, has committed a breach of this provision (Whiteman v. Sadler, [1910] A. C. 514; Stirling v. Silburn and Pyman, [1910] 1 K. B. 67; compare Chapman v. Michaelson, [1908] 2 Ch. 612; affirmed, [1909] 1 Ch. 238, C. A.; Staffordshire Financial Co. v. Valentine (1910), 26 T. L. R. 362, C. A.). So, also, has one who carries on business through an intermediary, without disclosing his own identity until the transaction is complete (Re a Debtor, Ex parte Carden (1908), 52 Sol. Jo. 209, C. A.).

A trivial variation in the name, e.g., "W Loan and Discount Co." and "W Loan and Discount Office," which is not calculated to deceive, is immaterial (Wentworth Loan and Discount Co. v. Lefkowitz (1911), 105 L. T. 585, affirmed (1912), 28 T. L. R. 334, C. A.). The distinction between this provision and the ensuing one (see the text, infra) is that the first is aimed at rendering the money-lender liable to penalties, and the second at setting aside the particular contract (S. C. (1911), 105 L. T. 585, per LUSH, J.). The question whether the variance amounts to a difference is a question of law (S. C. (1912), 28 T. L. R. 334, 335, C. A.).

(o) As to what is a "security for money," see Re Robinson, Clarkson v. Robinson (No. 2) (1911), 104 L. T. 712, C. A. Compare West Ham Guardians v. Owens (1872), L. R. 8 Exch. 37, as to a judgment being a valuable security within the meaning of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 103), s. 16.

(p) A "money-lender" who enters into an agreement or takes security under the circumstances mentioned in note (n), supra, has committed a breach of this provision also; see cases cited in note (n), supra. As to the rights of assignees of contracts etc. rendered illegal by the Money-lenders Acts (see note (l), p. 44, ante), see p. 52, post.

(q) It is not necessary that every incident of the money-lending business should be transacted at the "money-lender's" registered office. If he really deals with a borrower at his registered address, whether by interview or correspondence, he may without infringing the Act transact negotiations or conclude the actual contract elsewhere (per Lord LORE-BURN, L.C., in Kirkwood v. Gadd, [1910] A. C. 422). In each case it must be a question of fact whether he is really carrying on his business elsewhere than at his registered address; see, on the one hand, Staffordshire Financial Co. v. Hunt, [1907] W. N. 258 (where it was held that the "money-lender" was carrying on business elsewhere than at his registered address); and, on the other hand, Kirkwood v. Gadd, supra, reversing S. C., sub nom. Gadd v. Provincial Union Bank, [1909] 2 K. B. 353, C. A.; see also King v. Turnbull (1908), 24 T. L. R. 434; King v. Massey (1908), 24 T. L. R. 710 (completion of business at office of borrower); Jackson v. Price, [1910] 1 K. B. 143 (cheque sent to borrower by post); Levene v. Gardner (1909), 25 T. L. R. 711 (signature of promissory note at place reasonable sum for expenses, to furnish the borrower with a copy of any document relating to the loan or any security therefor (r).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Penalties for Breach of Statutory Restrictions.

92. A “money-lender” (s) who carries on business otherwise than in his registered name, or in more than one name (t), or elsewhere than at his registered address, or fails to comply with any other of the statutory obligations mentioned in the preceding paragraph, is liable (u), on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (v), to a fine not exceeding £100, and, in the case of a second or subsequent conviction (w), to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding three months, or to a fine not exceeding £100, or to both. If the offender is a body corporate, it is liable on a second or subsequent conviction (w) to a fine not exceeding £500.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Illegality of Loans made in Breach of Statutory Restrictions.

Bradford Advance Co.* (1910), 26 T. L. R. 533, where it was held that the “money-lender” had not committed any breach of the statutory provision requiring him to carry on his business at his registered address and not elsewhere; compare Blair v. Buckworth (1908), 24 T. L. R. 474, C. A. Having regard to the observations of the Lords of Appeal in Kirkwood v. Gadd, [1910] A. C. 422, it may be doubted whether Lazarus v. Gardner (1909), 25 T. L. R. 499, 719, C. A., was rightly decided.

(r) The obligation to furnish a copy implies, it is submitted, an obligation to permit reasonable inspection of the original for the purposes of comparing it with the copy.

(s) For the meaning of this term, see p. 44, ante.

(t) “A money-lender” who in fact carries on business in two or more names commits an offence against the Money-lenders Acts (see note (l), p. 44, ante), and is liable to conviction, although owing to a mistake on the part of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue each of the several names used by him has been placed on the register (*Whiteman v. illegal, and he cannot maintain any action to recover the money lent or enforce any security obtained by him in respect thereof.

SECT. 3.—*Loans of Money by Unregistered Persons.*SUB-SECT. 1.—By Persons who are not Money-lenders.

94. The loan of money by a person who is not a "money-lender" (d), and, therefore, not required to register himself nor subject to the restrictions imposed by the Money-lenders Acts (e), is, since the repeal of the usury statutes (f), governed by the general law relating to contracts. In such cases the loan of money creates a debt recoverable by action (g), and the debt which constitutes the cause of action arises instantly on the making of the loan (h). A request for payment of the debt before action brought is not necessary unless the parties stipulate for it (i).

95. Where money is lent upon mortgage and the mortgage deed does not contain any covenant, either express or implied, to repay the loan (j), or where the borrower, having agreed to repay the loan on demand or to execute a mortgage, refuses to do so (k), the debt may be recovered in an action for money lent; but where there is a covenant by the borrower to repay, the action must be brought on the covenant (l).

(g) The mere payment of money by one person to another, or the production of an I.O.U., or of a cheque given in respect of money paid, is not evidence of a loan, the presumption being that the money was paid in respect of a debt already due (Welch v. Seaborn (1816), 1 Stark. 474). "An I.O.U. is no more proof of money lent by the party holding it to the party sought to be charged than of goods sold and delivered by one to the other" (Fesenmayer v. Adcock (1847), 16 M. & W. 449, per PARKE, B., at p. 450). See Curtis v. Rickards (1840), 1 Man. & G. 46 (the production of an I.O.U. by the plaintiff is prima facie evidence of an account stated by the defendant with him); compare Douglas v. Home (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 641; Pearce v. Davis (1834), 1 Mood. & R. 365. See also Morgan v. Jones (1830), 1 Cr. & J. 162; Howard v. Danbury (1846), 2 C. B. 803; *Enthoven v. App. 225; and see title MORTGAGE, p. 113, post.

96. Where money is lent on a security which is void (m) or worthless (n), the lender may recover the amount of the loan in an action for money lent.

97. Where money is lent for an illegal or immoral purpose, the lender cannot maintain an action for money lent (o), such transactions being governed by the same rule of law which applies to other illegal contracts (p).

98. If a person fraudulently conceals his identity, and thereby induces another to borrow money from him, the borrower may repudiate the transaction (q).

SUB-SECT. 2.—By Unregistered Money-lenders.

99. The loan of money in the course of his business (r), by a person who is a "money-lender" (s), but is not registered, is illegal and void, and he cannot maintain any action to recover the money lent or enforce any security obtained by him in respect thereof (t).

(m) Davis v. Rees (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 408, C. A., where a bill of sale, containing a covenant for repayment, was held void under the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), on the ground that it was not in the form given in the schedule to that Act; but it was held that an action would lie for money lent, there being an implied agreement to repay apart from the bill of sale.

(n) Bank of England v. Tomkins (1842), 6 Jur. 347; see Timmins v. Gibbins (1852), 18 Q. B. 722.

(o) Thus money lent to play at "hazard," which is forbidden by the law of England (Gaming Acts, 1738 (12 Geo. 2, c. 28) and 1744 (18 Geo. 2, c. 34)), cannot be recovered (M'Kinnell v. Robinson (1838), 3 M. & W. 434); but it would appear that money lent for the purpose of gambling in a country where the game is not illegal may be recovered in this country (Quarrier v. Colston (1842), 1 Ph. 147; King v. Kemp (1863), 8 L. T. 255; Saxby v. Fulton, [1909] 2 K. B. 208, C. The court will not necessarily assist a plaintiff by reason of a co-defendant's omission to plead the statute; see Re Robinson's Settlement, Gant v. Hobbs, supra; titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 390; PLEADING. The transaction will be set aside, at any rate at the instance of the trustee in bankruptcy of the borrower, even though judgment has been obtained for the loan and a subsequent agreement entered into for paying off the judgment debt by instalments (Re Campbell, Ex parte Seal, [1911] 2 K. B. 992, C. A.). As to loans by registered money-lenders, see p. 48, ante.

SECT. 3.
Loans of Condition upon which relief may be granted.

to lender.

The borrower is entitled to a declaration that the transaction was illegal and void (u); but if he seeks to obtain any equitable relief, the court can impose as a condition on the grant of such equitable relief that he himself should do what is fair and equitable in the matter, and repay to the "money-lender" the money actually lent with reasonable interest thereon (x).

Although the "money-lender" cannot maintain an action to recover the money lent, he is not debarred from maintaining any action, other than that for money lent, which may be open to him; if, for instance, he was induced to lend the money by fraud, he may bring an action for damages for deceit (a).

Provision in favour of assignees or holders for value.

100. If an agreement made between a borrower and a "money-lender" (b), or a security given by the one to the other, is illegal and void as between the original parties thereto under the Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c), it is nevertheless valid in favour of a bonâ fide assignee or holder for value (who is not himself a "money-lender" (b)) without notice (d) of the defect, and of any person deriving title under him; and all payments and transfers of money or property made bonâ fide by any person (whether acting in a fiduciary character or otherwise) on the faith of the validity of such agreement or security and without notice (d) of the defect are, and are to be deemed always to have been, as valid in favour of that person as they would have been if the agreement or security had itself been valid (e). If the borrower or any other person is prejudiced by this provision, the "money-lender" is liable to indemnify him (e).

This provision does not render valid any agreement, security, or other transaction which is void or unenforceable for any other reason, or any agreement or security which was declared void by a court of competent jurisdiction before the 16th December, 1911 (f).

Notice of defect.

101. No person is to be deemed to have had notice of a defect in an agreement or security merely because a search in the register of money-lenders (g) would have disclosed the defect, or shown that the agreement or security was effected with a "money-lender" (h).

SECT. 5.—Loans of Money to Infants and Expectant Heirs.

SECT. 5.

SUB-SECT. 1.—*To Infants.*Loans of

102. The loan of money to an infant (i) is absolutely void (j) ; and an agreement made by the borrower after he comes of age to pay money in respect of any such loan, and any negotiable or other instrument given in respect of such loan, are void so far as they relate to money which represents or is payable in respect of such loan (k).

To infants.

SUB-SECT. 2.—To Expectant Heirs.

103. From the earliest times relief has been given in equity in the case of unconscionable bargains with expectant heirs (l). In such cases, on the borrower submitting to do equity by repaying what is justly due, the court will set aside transactions which it considers unrighteous, and will order that the securities given shall stand as security for the money actually advanced with interest (m).

(n) Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 1 (4). Where the contract is made abroad, and the parties intend that it should be performed abroad, the Money-lenders Acts (see note (l), p. 44, ante) do not apply, and no relief thereunder can be obtained (Shrichand & Co. v. Lacon (1906), 22 T. L. R. 245; Velchand v. Manners (1909), 25 T. L. R. 329); nor do they apply where the lender is not a "money-lender" (as to meaning of which term, see p. 44, ante) and required to register himself; see p. 44, ante. A money-lender who is required to register himself, but fails to do so, cannot maintain any action to recover the money he has lent (see p. 51, ante), and consequently in such a case the borrower has no need to apply to the court for relief. Nor has the borrower any need to apply for relief in a case where the lender, though duly registered, has committed some breach of the statutory provisions affecting his trade which renders the transaction unenforceable; see p. 48, ante.

(o) "Charges" include the amounts charged for expenses, inquiries, fines, bonus, premium, or renewals (Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 1 (1)).

unconscionable (q) or is otherwise such that a court of equity would give relief (r), the borrower, or any surety for the borrower, or financial position, the presence or absence of security, the relation in which the money-lender stood to the borrower, and the total remuneration derived by the money-lender from the whole transaction; see Levene v. Greenwood (1904), 20 T. L. R. 389; Wells v. Joyce, [1905] 2 I. R. 134. In Samuel v. Pazolt (1907), 23 T. L. R. 622, RIDLEY, J., and in Burlton v. Companies Registration Agency (1907), 23 T. L. R. 151, BUCKNILL, J., left to the jury the question whether the interest charged was excessive and the transaction harsh and unconscionable; but the Court of Appeal did not decide as to the propriety of this course (S. C., 23 T. L. R. 337, C. A.). The fact that the borrower understood when he entered into the transaction what was the rate of interest or the amount of the charges payable by him to the money-lender does not preclude him from obtaining relief (Blair v. Buckworth (1908), 24 T. L. R. 474, C. A.).

(q) As to unconscionable bargains in general, see titles EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 20, 71; FRAUDULENT AND VOIDABLE CONVEYANCES, Vol. XV., pp. 111 et seq. As to unconscionable salvage bargains, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION. In the absence of any other circumstances tending to show that the transaction was harsh and unconscionable, the mere fact that the money-lender has exacted, by way of interest or charges, amounts which are found by the court to be excessive, may of itself be sufficient to prove that the transaction was "harsh and unconscionable" within the meaning of the Money-lenders Acts (as to which see note (l), p. 44, ante). "If no justification for the excessive interest or charges be established, the presumption that the transaction was harsh and unconscionable hardens into a certainty" (Samuel v. Newbold, [1906] A. C. 461, per Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at p. 467); see also Michaelson v. Nichols (1910), 26 T. L. R. 327; Jackson v. Price (1909), 26 T. L. R. 106; Wolfe v. Batters (1909), 25 T. L. R. 575; Blair v. Buckworth, supra (where the loan was well secured, and the high charges made by the money-lender were therefore unjustifiable); King v. Barnett (1908), 25 T. L. R. 52; Levene v. Titchener (1907), 23 T. L. R. 508; Part v. Bond (1906), 94 L. T. 390, C. A.; Poncione v. Higgins (1904), 21 T. L. R. 11, C. A.; Bonnard v. Dott (1905), 21 T. L. Green* (1907), 23 T. L. R. 560 (where relief was refused); Pall Mall Bank v. Philp (1904), 41 Sc. L. R. 621. A condition that the whole debt becomes due on failure to pay the first instalment is prima facie harsh and unconscionable (Harris v. Clarson (1910), 27 T. L. R. 30; see Wells v. Joyce, supra). Since relief cannot be given under the Acts (as to which see note (l), p. 44, ante) unless the interest or charges be excessive, and an unjustifiable excess of interest or charges establishes that the transaction was harsh and unconscionable, it follows that in every application for relief the question at issue is whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the interest or charges are excessive; but the other circumstances of the case, such as whether the borrower understood the transaction, as in the case where there is a default clause (see Wells v. Joyce, supra; Levene v. Greenwood, supra), or whether the money-lender was guilty of oppression, or took improper advantage of the weakness, or folly, or ignorance, of the borrower, are material to that issue and must be considered; see Samuel v. Newbold, supra, per Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at p. 467; King (J.), Ltd. v. Hay Currie (1911), 28 T. L. R. 10.

(r) See p. 56, post. In such case the effect of the Money-lenders Acts (as to which see note (l), p. 44, ante) is to give to every court in which the money-lender may seek to enforce his bargain power to grant to the borrower the relief prescribed by the statute, which is more extensive than that given previously by courts of equity. But if the transaction is harsh and unconscionable, and the interest or charges excessive, relief may now be given, even though a court of equity would not have granted it before any other person liable to the “money-lender” in respect of the loan, may obtain relief under the Money-lenders Acts (s).

105. Any court in which the “money-lender” has taken or might take proceedings for the recovery of the money lent can give relief (t), and the application for relief may be made before the time for repayment of the loan or any instalment thereof has arrived (a).

the Acts; see Samuel v. Newbold, [1906] A. C. 461, and especially the judgment of Lord MACNAGHTEN, at pp. 468 et seq. The contrary decision in Wilton & Co. v. Osborn, [1901] 2 K. B. 110, is no longer law.

(t) Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 1 (1), (2), (3). Where there is an application relating to the admission or amount of a proof by a “money-lender” in any bankruptcy proceedings, the court in bankruptcy may reopen the transaction and grant relief from payment of anything in excess of the sum which it ascertains to be fairly due (Re a Debtor, Ex parte the Debtor, [1903] 1 K. B. 705, C. A.; Re Attree, Ex parte Ward, [1907] 2 K. B. 868; Re Seed, Ex parte King (1908), 26 T. L. R. 348; Re a Debtor, Ex parte Carden (1908), 52 Sol. Jo. 209, C. A.). This power may be exercised by a registrar in bankruptcy, and relief may be granted, even though the borrower did not defend an action brought by the “money-lender” to enforce his claim (Re a Debtor, Ex parte the Debtor, supra); but if the “money-lender” withdraws his proof, the court in bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to grant relief (Re Attree, Ex parte Ward, supra). Where the “money-lender” is the petitioning creditor, and the petition is opposed on the ground that the debtor is entitled to relief (see p. 53, ante) under the Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), the court in bankruptcy must investigate the transaction, and if a case for relief is established, must deal with the petition accordingly (Re Shaw, Ex parte Gill (1901), 83 L. T. 754, C. A.; compare Re Bebro, [1900] 2 Q. B. 316, C. A.); see, further, title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., pp. 57, 211. Where the “money-lender” brings an action in the High Court to recover money lent, and the interest charged is apparently excessive, he may obtain summary judgment under R. S. C., Ord. 14, for the balance of his principal remaining unpaid, i.e., the difference between the amount actually lent and the amount which the borrower has repaid, but he cannot obtain summary judgment for any interest whatsoever (Lazarus v. Smith, [1908] 2 K. B. 266, C. A.; Wells v. Allott, [1904] 2 K. B. 842, C. A.; Dott v. Bonnard (1904), 21 T. L. R. 166, C. A.). Where the “money-lender” brings an action in the county court the power of the court to give relief may be exercised at any stage of the proceedings, and whether notice has, or has not, been given by the defendant of his intention to apply to the court to exercise that power (County Court Rules, 1903 and 1904, Ord. 50, r. 33 (1)). For the limits of the jurisdiction of county courts, see title COUNTY COURTS, Vol. VIII., p. 428.

(a) Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 1 (2). The borrower may bring an action either in the Chancery or the King’s Bench Division of the High Court, or (if the amount is within the limit of the county court jurisdiction) in the county court, for a declaration of his right to relief (ibid.; and Samuel v. Newbold, supra, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 468). As to whether, when the “money-lender” has brought his action in one Division, the borrower may go to another Division to get the bargain set aside, or vice versa, see Rechnitzer v. Samuel (1906), 95 L. T. 75; Tumin v. Levi (1911), 28 T. L. R. 125, C. A. In Tumin v. Levi, supra, the suitability of the short cause list for actions brought by money-lenders was discussed; see ibid., per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 126, who thought that the proceedings under R. S. C., Ord. 14, should be stayed, and per KENNEDY, L.J., at p. 126, who differed; see also Thomson v. South Eastern Rail. Co. (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 320, C. A.

SECT. 6.

Relief of Borrowers.

Nature of relief.

106. The relief so obtainable is of the most ample description (b). The court may reopen the transaction (c) and, taking an account between the parties, may ascertain what sum is fairly due for principal, interest and charges, having regard to the risk and all the circumstances of the case (d), and may grant relief from the payment of anything in excess of that sum; and if any such excess has been already paid or allowed in account, may direct the "money-lender" to repay it. The court may also set aside, either wholly or in part, any security given or agreement made in respect of the loan, without prejudice, however, to the rights of any bonâ fide assignee or holder for value without notice, which rights are not affected thereby (e). If the "money-lender" has parted with any security, the court may order him to give an indemnity in respect thereof (f). The relief may be given notwithstanding any statement or settlement of account or any agreement purporting to close the previous dealings and create a new obligation (g).

Equitable relief.

107. In cases where the lender is not a "money-lender," the borrower can only obtain relief if the circumstances are such that the court under its equitable jurisdiction has power—as in the case of transactions procured by misrepresentation or affected with

(b) The relief which the court may grant under the Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), is wholly different from that which courts of equity grant in the case of expectant heirs (Samuel v. Newbold, [1906] A. C. 461, per Lords MACNAGHTEN and ATKINSON, at pp. 468, 476); and see p. 53, ante. "Equity mends no man's bargain" (Maynard v. Moseley (1676), 3 Swan. 651, per Lord NOTTINGHAM, L.C., at p. 653); but the Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), authorises and empowers the court to create a fresh bargain between the parties in the place of the bargain which is impeached.

(c) The transaction may be reopened even though the whole amount claimed by the "money-lender" has been paid under pressure of a writ (Samuel v. Bell (1905), 22 T. L. R. 118, per CHANNELL, J.); but a closed transaction will not be reopened unless there has been deception or pressure by the "money-lender" (Michaelson v. Nichols (1910), 26 T. L. R. 327, per PICKFORD, J.).

(d) The Commissioners are appointed by Parliament (Public Works Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 89), ss. 4, 5), with power to take or defend legal proceedings by their secretary (ibid., s. 5 (1)), to examine on oath (ibid., s. 5 (2)), to appoint officers (ibid., s. 6), and to make regulations (ibid., s. 41). (b) Public Works Loans Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 77), s. 2; Public Works Loans Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 61), s. 2. Loans from the local loans fund (see p. 59, ante) on the security of local rates (Public Works Loans Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 51), ss. 1, 12) have a minimum rate of interest of $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. (ibid., s. 1). By the Public Works Loans Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 42), s. 2, $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. is substituted for 4 per cent. in the case of canal loans collaterally secured.

(e) See, as to the effect of such a mortgage, Public Works Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 89), s. 19.

Commissioners may, on default, levy the rate themselves, with any expenses thereby incurred (f).

115. Where default is made in payment of a loan on personal security the Commissioners may, if they think fit, issue a warrant at any time (g) to enforce payment, and the court may thereon issue a writ of extent or diem clausit extremum (h).

116. All loans become immediately payable on the insolvency of an individual or company liable as principal or surety to pay the principal or interest of any loan (i).

(i) Public Works Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 89), s. 31.

(k) For definition of "local authority" (which includes every authority having power to levy a rate), see Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), s. 34; and see the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 242 (1). As to the powers of local authorities to borrow, see p. 59, ante, and titles ANIMALS, Vol. I., pp. 430, 431; BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., pp. 476 et seq.; ELECTRIC LIGHTING AND POWER, Vol. XII., pp. 553 et seq.; EXPLOSIVES, Vol. XIV., p. 372, note (h); LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 244, 282, 293, 317, 337, 361, 385; METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., pp. 444, 449; PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION. A local authority may make, rescind, or alter rules for the purposes of the Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), with the consent of the Local Government Board (ibid., s. 30 (2)).

(l) A local authority is deemed to borrow subject to the provisions of the Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), whenever it raises a loan by the issue of debentures, or debenture stock, or annuity certificates (hereafter referred to as "securities"; see p. 62, post), purporting to be created under its powers, or partly in one way and partly in another; but a loan directed to be raised by such securities under the Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), must be raised only by the mode thereby prescribed (ibid., s. 4; see the text, infra). A local authority may in like manner re-borrow in order to discharge any lawfully contracted loan, but the time for repayment must not be extended beyond the unexpired portion of the original term without the sanction of the Local Government Board, nor, in any case, beyond the prescribed period (Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), s. 31). For the definition of "prescribed," see ibid., s. 34, and p. 63, post.

(m) In this and the following pages "loan" means a loan borrowed or proposed to be borrowed under the Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83).

(n) 38 & 39 Vict. c. 83; see ibid., s. 31. The Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), came into operation on the 1st January, 1876; see ibid., s. 3.

securities (p) therefor under official sanction (q); and the owner of any such security may, on application to the Board, be furnished with a statement of the value of the security and of the priority of the loan thus secured (r).

119. Securities (s) may take the form of debentures (t), debenture stock (u), or annuity certificates (b). If payable to a person named therein, they are termed "nominal securities" (c).

(q) Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), s. 26. As to the particulars and evidence which may be required by the Local Government Board before granting official sanction, and the powers the Board may exercise in this respect, and as to the authentication of securities issued under official sanction, and the effect of such sanction as evidence in relation to the power of the local authority and the security issued, see ibid.

(r) Ibid. Such statement is evidence of the facts therein stated (ibid.).

(s) For definition of "security," see ibid., s. 34; and see note (l), p. 61, ante. As to the execution of securities, and as to the supply by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue of forms of security, see Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), s. 22. As to the issue of fresh securities in case of loss, see ibid., s. 33. As to the power of the Public Works Loans Commissioners (see p. 58, ante) to take such securities in relation to loans made by them, see Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), s. 28; and p. 60, ante. As to the investment in securities of deposits in trustee savings banks, see title BANKERS AND BANKING, Vol. I., pp. 577, 578. As to the investment of funds of industrial and provident societies, see title INDUSTRIAL, PROVIDENT, AND SIMILAR SOCIETIES, Vol. XVII., p. 21. As to criminal offences in respect of personation and forgery, see Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), s. 32; and title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 706, 727, 755, 756.

(t) Debentures take effect as deeds and may be "bearer" debentures (that is, transferable by delivery), or "nominal" debentures (that is, payable to a person named therein, his executors, administrators and assigns (Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), s. 5)). For the definitions of "person" and "executors and administrators," see ibid., s. 34. A debenture, when no sum is prescribed, must not be issued for less than £20. For regulations as to the provisions of debentures and the interest thereon, see ibid., s. 5. For provisions relating to coupons for interest on debentures, see ibid., ss. 5, 17—19. As to stamp duty, see titles BILLS OF EXCHANGE, PROMISSORY NOTES AND NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS, Vol. II., p. 580, note (l); REVENUE. As to the investment of trust funds in nominal debentures, see Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 5 (3); title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES. As to the registration of nominal securities, see p. 63, post.

(a) Such stock may be issued when the local authority has power to issue debenture stock (Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 83), s. 6). Stock certificates may, or may not, be issued in respect of debenture stock. In the former case, the certificate (defined as "a stock certificate to bearer") is transferable by delivery. In the latter case the stock is defined as "nominal debenture stock" (ibid.). For regulations as to the issue and amount of, and evidence of the title to, debenture stock, and as to the recovery of interest thereon, see ibid. For provisions relating to coupons on stock certificates to bearer, see ibid., ss. 17, 19. Stock described in a stock certificate to bearer may be converted into nominal debenture stock; see ibid., s. 20. A trustee may in certain circumstances invest trust funds in nominal debenture stock, but, unless authorised by his trust, may not hold a certificate to bearer (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), ss. 5 (3), 7 (1) (c); see title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES). As to the registration of nominal securities, see p. 63, post; see also title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 385, 386.

A register of nominal securities must be kept (d), and their transfer and transmission are subject to special provisions (e).

SECT. 2.
By Other Persons.

120. Notice of any trust is not receivable by a local authority in respect of any security issued by such authority (f); nor is the person advancing money on such security bound to inquire into the application or to be held responsible for the misapplication thereof (g).

121. Sums due or authorised to be raised on securities issued in respect of the same loan are payable pari passu; but if in respect of different loans, they take priority according to the date of the loan (h).

Priorities.

122. The recovery of any sum due in respect of a security (i) may be enforced by mandamus (k), and in certain circumstances application may be made for the appointment of a receiver (l).

Remedy for non-payment.

123. Loans must be discharged within the period (if any) prescribed (m) by the Act authorising the local authority to borrow, otherwise within twenty years from the date of the loan; and the discharge must be effected by the issue of annuity certificates (n), or debentures (o), or by an annual appropriation (p), or by the establishment of a sinking fund (q).

Part I.—Definition and Classification.

SECT. 1.—General Characteristics.

Definition of mortgage.

124. A mortgage is a conveyance of land, or an assignment of a chattel, or of a chose in action, as a security for the payment of a debt or the discharge of some other obligation for which it is given, the security being redeemable on the payment or discharge of such debt or obligation (a). No particular words or form of conveyance are necessary to constitute a mortgage. As a general rule, subject to very few exceptions, wherever a conveyance or assignment of an estate is originally intended as a security for money, whether this intention appears from the deed itself or by any other instrument or by parol evidence, it is always considered as a mortgage and redeemable (b).

Elements :—
(i.) Implied obligation to pay ;
(ii.) security for payment.

A mortgage consists of two things. It is a personal contract for a debt and an estate pledged as a security for the debt (c). Every mortgage implies a debt and a personal obligation by the mortgagor to pay it (d). If there is a covenant or bond for its payment it is a specialty debt; if not, it is a simple contract debt (e). In cases in which the mortgagor is in a fiduciary position mortgaging for the purposes of his trust, it is usual to negative the personal liability by an express declaration (f).

(a) Saniley v. Wilde, [1899] 2 Ch. 474, C. A., per LINDLEY, M.R.; Noakes & Co., Ltd. v. Rice, [1902] A. C. 24, 28. For the purposes of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), "mortgage" includes any charge on any property for securing money or money's worth (ibid., s. 2 (vi.)). (f) See Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., pp. 559, 561. A covenant by a trustee or other person in a mortgage deed to pay out of a specific fund prevents a personal liability being implied, and an action for money lent does not lie against the covenantor (Mathew v. Blackmore (1857), 1 H. & N. 762); it has been held that a covenant "as trustee but not so as to impose any personal liability" can be enforced against the covenantor personally (Walling v. Lewis, [1911] 1 Ch. 414); but see Re Robinson's Settlement, Gant v. Hobbs (1912), 28 T. L. R. 298, C. A., per BUCKLEY, L.J.; and see Furnivall v. Coombes (1843), 5 Man. & G. 736.

125. Incident to every mortgage is the right of the debtor to redeem, a right which is called his “equity of redemption,” and which continues notwithstanding that the mortgagor fails to pay the debt in accordance with the proviso for redemption. This right arises from the transaction being considered as a mere loan of money secured by a pledge of the estate (g). Any provision inserted in the mortgage to prevent redemption on payment or performance of the debt or obligation for which the security was given is termed a “clog” or “fetter” on the equity of redemption, and is void (h). The right to redeem is so inseparable an incident of a mortgage that it cannot be taken away by an express agreement of the parties that the mortgage shall not be redeemable or that the right shall be confined to a particular time or to a particular description of persons (i). The right continues unless and until by judgment for foreclosure (j) or the operation of the Statute of Limitations (k) the character of creditor is changed for that of owner, or the interest of the mortgagor is destroyed by sale either under the process of the court or of a power in the mortgage incident to the security (l).

Right of
essential.

126. Formerly the right of the creditor to foreclosure (j) was regarded as so necessary an incident to a mortgage that it was said there is in strictness no mortgage where there is no right of foreclosure (m); and a conveyance by way of security for money advanced will be construed as conferring a right to foreclose unless the terms of the instrument exclude that construction (n).

Right of
not essential.

But there is no right of foreclosure unless the contract contains a condition upon the breach of which a forfeiture is created, for the court grants foreclosure upon the principle that the mortgagor has broken a condition which forfeits his right to redeem (o). For this reason a conveyance of an estate to a person in trust that it should (g) Seton v. Slade, Hunter v. Seton (1802), 7 Ves. 265, 273. At common law, unless the mortgagor strictly complied as to time and place with the condition of payment, he forfeited his estate, which became the absolute property of the mortgagee (Co. Litt. 205 a, Butler's note). From early times, however, the courts of equity held that until foreclosure by order of the court the mortgagor, by applying within a reasonable time and offering to pay principal and interest and all proper costs, might redeem the estate forfeited at law (Emanuel College (Master etc.) v. Evans (1625), 1 Rep. Ch. 10 [18]). As the right was only enforceable in the courts of equity it was called the “equity of redemption.” As to the nature of the equity of redemption, see pp. 138 et seq., post.

(l) For all purposes of dealing with the property the person entitled to the equity of redemption is considered as the owner of the land, and a mortgage in fee is considered as personal assets (Casborne v. Scarfe (1738), 1 Atk. 603, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 605; Heath v. Pugh (1881), 6 Q. B. D. 345, C. stand charged with a principal sum and interest, with a power of sale, does not entitle the grantee to foreclosure (p).

The court, however, regards the substance and essence of the transaction, and a mortgagor is entitled to redeem a security by way of trust for sale notwithstanding that no express right to redeem is reserved (q), though the mortgagee cannot proceed for foreclosure, but is limited to his remedy by sale (r). Such a transaction is not a trust which the mortgagor can require to be carried out, as the discretion to sell is in the mortgagee alone (s).

proviso for
redemption.

127. An instrument which is in form an absolute conveyance will be treated as a mortgage notwithstanding the absence of a proviso for redemption, if such absence is due to fraud, mistake, or some unfair advantage taken by the mortgagee (t). The former practice was to make a mortgage by an absolute conveyance with a defeasance or clause of redemption in a separate deed. This was early condemned on account of the danger of the defeasance being lost or suppressed and an absolute conveyance set up (a). Parol evidence is admissible to show that a proviso for redemption was omitted through fraud (b).

Sale and
repurchase.

If, however, the intended arrangement is not a lending and borrowing transaction but an absolute sale, accompanied by a contemporaneous agreement for repurchase or a stipulation that the conveyance should be void upon payment of a certain sum at a fixed time, this does not entitle the vendor to such a right to redeem as is incidental to a mortgage, but creates a mere right of repurchase to be exercised in accordance with the terms of the power (c). The question always is—was the original transaction a bonâ-fide sale with a contract for repurchase, or was it a mortgage under the form of a sale? (d) In the former case the condition for repurchase is construed strictly against the vendor, and where there is a time limited for the purpose it must be precisely observed (e).

128. A mortgage of personal chattels is essentially different from a pledge or pawn under which money is advanced upon the security of chattels delivered into the possession of the lender, such delivery of possession being an essential element of the transaction (f). A mortgage conveys the whole legal interest in the chattels; a pledge or pawn conveys only a special property, leaving the general property in the pledgor or pawnor (g): the pledgee or pawnee never has the absolute ownership of the goods (h), but has a special property in them coupled with a power of selling and transferring them to a purchaser on default of payment at the stipulated time, if any, or at a reasonable time after demand and non-payment if no time for payment is agreed upon (i).

Characteristics.

distinguished
or pawn.

129. A mortgage differs also from the right of lien at common law, which is only a personal right to hold the goods of another until a debt is paid, and one which cannot be parted with and continues only so long as the possessor of the right holds the goods (k). A mortgage differs also from the right of lien given by statute in the case of railways (l), shipowners (m), solicitors (n), and in other like cases, the remedy in each case being controlled by the terms of the statute.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Characteristics of Each.

130. Property of every description, which is capable of absolute sale, may, speaking generally, be the subject of a mortgage, either legal or equitable.

WILLES, J., distinguishes the securities thus:—"There are three kinds of security: the first a simple lien; the second a mortgage passing the property out and out; the third a security intermediate between a lien and a mortgage, viz., a pledge—where by contract a deposit of goods is made a security for a debt and the right to the property vests in the pledgee so far as is necessary to secure the debt" (*Halliday v. SECT. 2.
Legal and Equitable Mortgages.

Its effect is to vest the legal estate in the mortgagee, who, unless the deed expressly provides for possession by the mortgagor until default, is entitled immediately upon the execution of the deed to possession of the property (o), though the title only becomes absolute upon default in payment of the mortgage money at the time fixed, and the property remains subject to the right of redemption until such right is destroyed by foreclosure or sale or otherwise.

Equitable
mortgage.

132. An equitable mortgage is a contract which creates a charge on the property, but does not pass the legal estate to the creditor. Its operation is that of an executory assurance, which, as between the parties, and so far as equitable rights and remedies are concerned, is equivalent to an actual assurance, and is enforceable under the equitable jurisdiction of the court (p).

As a general rule, all property, whether real or personal, which may be the subject of a legal mortgage, can equally be charged in equity, and there is no distinction in this respect between freeholds and copyholds (q).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Kinds of Equitable Mortgage.

mortgage,

133. An equitable mortgage may be made either (1) by an agreement to create a legal mortgage (r); (2) by a mortgage of an equity of redemption of property which is already subject to a legal mortgage (r); (3) by a mortgage of other equitable interests (s); (4) by a deposit of title deeds (a); or (5) by an equitable charge (b).

Effect of Statute of Frauds.

134. An equitable mortgage of an interest in land (c) (except in the case of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds (d)) is not enforceable, unless a memorandum or note thereof is made in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith or some person thereunto by him lawfully authorised (e), or unless there has been part performance of the contract sufficient to take it out of the statute (f).

(e) Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4; see Lacon v. Mertins (1743), 3 Atk. 1, 4; and see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 361; SALE OF LAND. For a form of equitable mortgage of a building agreement, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., p. 719.

(f) See titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 379 et seq.; EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 92. But payment of the consideration is not sufficient part performance (Re Whitting, Ex parte Hall, supra, at p. 619; Clinan v. Cooke (1802), 1 Sch. & Lef. 22, 40; Maddison v. Alderson (1883), 8 App. Cas. 467, 479.) As to deposit of title deeds being sufficient part performance, see p. 79, post.

An offer to give a security, signed by the debtor and accepted by parol by the creditor, is sufficient (g).

Personal chattels are not within the above rule, and an equitable mortgage thereof is not, either at common law or apart from statutory provisions specially applicable to such securities (h), required to be in writing (i).

SECT. 2.
Legal and Equitable Mortgages.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Agreement for a Mortgage.

135. In equity a mortgage is created by a contract to execute, when required, a legal mortgage, or by a contract that certain property shall stand as a security for a certain sum (k). The agreement may be enforced according to its terms, even though the legal mortgage when executed will confer on the mortgagee an immediate power of sale (a). But the court will not enforce specific performance of an agreement to make or take a loan of money, whether the loan is to be on security or not, if no money has been actually advanced (b).

Agreement to execute mortgage.

The legal mortgage, when executed, will contain any clauses and provisions specially stipulated for, but an agreement to execute a legal mortgage, with such powers and provisions and in such form as the mortgagee may require for further securing the principal moneys and interest, only extends to reasonable provisions, and does not enable the mortgagee to insert terms excluding the operation of the statutory provision (c) which abolishes consolidation

C. 346. In Hunter v. Langford (Lord) (1828), 2 Mol. 272, specific performance was ordered of an agreement to grant a mortgage for a loan of £30,000, of which £1,000 was already advanced; but it was refused in South African Territories v. Wallington, [1898] A. C. 309, where the defendant had applied for and paid a 10 per cent. deposit on some debentures. In the particular case of a contract to take debentures in a limited company, the remedy of specific performance is now, however, available to the company; see Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), s. 105, and title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 352. It is well settled that the actual advance of an agreed loan is not a part performance to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds (Re Whitting, Ex parte Hall (1879), 10 Ch. D. 615, 619, C. A.); but, except in the particular case of debentures, the aggrieved party would have his sole remedy in damages for breach of contract (South African Territories v. Wallington, supra). of mortgages (d), or extending the subject-matter of the mortgage (e). The mortgage should, however, contain a covenant for the payment of the debt and interest (f); and even where there is an agreement not to call in the money for a certain time, the mortgage must contain a proviso that the postponement shall be conditional on punctual payment of interest (g).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Mortgage of the Equity of Redemption.

Mortgage of
redemption.

136. Since the owner of property does not, by making a pledge or mortgage of it, cease to be owner of it any further than is necessary to give effect to the security he has thus created (h), an equitable mortgage may be created by an actual mortgage of the equity of redemption of property already in mortgage, that is, by a puisne mortgage expressed in legal form (i). Such securities are usually referred to according to their priority as second or third mortgages, or as the case may be.

Second and third mortgages.

A mortgagor who has mortgaged his property has a sufficient estate or interest, until foreclosure or sale, to convey to another person either by way of mortgage or sale. The subsequent mortgage as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee is a mortgage of the mortgagor's entire interest, saving only the rights of prior incumbrancers (k). When the first mortgage debt is satisfied, the first mortgagee is a trustee of the legal estate for any subsequent incumbrancers according to their priorities, and is bound to convey the estate to the subsequent mortgagee who has the best right to call for it (l). As between subsequent mortgagees in order, each one has, as against everyone behind him, a prior right to a reconveyance from a prior mortgagee whose mortgage debt has been satisfied (m).

(n) Formerly at law no possibility, right, title nor thing in action could be assigned to a stranger (Lampet's Case (1612), 10 Co. Rep. 46 b). The reasons which induced the courts of law to consider possibilities or choses in action as non-assignable were disregarded by courts of equity, and from early times assignments of a mere naked possibility or of a chose in action choses in action (o), such as debts or funds in the hands of trustees and including future choses in action and after-acquired property, are assignable by way of security (p).

SECT. 2.
Legal and Equitable Mortgages.

What is an equitable assignment.

138. Apart from the Judicature Act, 1873 (q), any arrangement, whether verbal or in writing (r), by which a person agrees to transfer or appropriate his right (s) to any specified property (t) which is in existence or which may come into existence (a) to another person for valuable consideration, is sufficient to operate as a valid equitable assignment (b).

139. As between the assignor and assignee of a debt (c) or of a fund in the hands of trustees (d), the title of the assignee is complete although no notice is given to the debtor or the trustee. Notice, however, should be given to the debtor or trustee to prevent payment to the assignor, for such payment by the debtor or trustee, without knowledge of the assignment, operates as a satisfaction of the debt or claim (e). It is not, however, essential that the notice for valuable consideration were held valid in courts of equity (Squib v. Wyn (1717), 1 P. Wms. 378; Row v. Dawson (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 331). See, further, title CHOSSES IN ACTION, Vol. IV., pp. 374 et seq.

should be express notice given by the assignee (f). An assignor can give no greater right in equity than he himself has (g); and a mortgagee of a chose in action takes subject to all equities between the debtor and creditor existing or arising out of circumstances existing before notice is given of the assignment whether the mortgagee has notice of them at the time of taking the assignment or not (h). But the debtor or holder of the fund cannot after notice of the assignment alter his rights to the prejudice of the assignee (i).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Mortgage by Deposit of Deeds.

Mortgage by
deeds.

140. A good security in equity may be created by the deposit of the title deeds of freehold or leasehold property or copies of court rolls of copyhold property (k). A deposit of title deeds is regarded as an imperfect mortgage which the mortgagee is entitled to have perfected; or as a contract for a legal mortgage which gives to the party entitled all such rights as he would have had if the contract had been completed (l). By the deposit the mortgagor contracts that his interest in the property comprised in the deeds shall be liable to the debt and binds himself to do all that is necessary to effect the vesting in the mortgagee of such interest as he has (m).

Form.

The deposit may be of the deeds alone (n), or may be accompanied by a memorandum of the terms of the deposit (o) or by an agreement to give a mortgage (p).

(p) Lister v. Turner (1846), 5 Hare, 281; National Provincial Bank of England v. Games, supra.

A deposit of title deeds as a security for a debt, without writing, or by word of mouth, may create a charge upon the property notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds (q), since the delivery of the deeds is sufficient part performance of the implied agreement to give a security (r), but where the deposit is accompanied by a written document the latter must be referred to in order to ascertain the exact nature of the charge (s), and parol evidence will not be admitted to contradict the writing (t) although parol evidence of a subsequent verbal agreement may be given (u).

SECT. 2.
Legal and Equitable Mortgages.

Deposit of deeds without writing.

141. A memorandum or agreement in writing showing an intention to deposit title deeds by way of mortgage or to charge the property comprised in the deeds is sufficient although no deeds are in fact deposited (a), and even though some of the deeds are not executed (b): so is a written direction or consent that the deeds may be retained as a security (c). A mere parol agreement to deposit which is not acted upon (d) is, however, not sufficient; but a verbal agreement to mortgage with a subsequent delivery of the deeds is sufficient, and the security relates back to the time of the agreement (e).

Memorandum without deposit.

142. To create a valid mortgage by deposit it is not necessary that the whole or even the most material of the title deeds should be deposited, nor that the deeds deposited should show a complete or good title in the depositor. It is sufficient if the deeds deposited bonâ fide relate to the property or are material evidence of title and are shown to have been deposited with the intention of creating a charge (f). All the deeds deposited are included in the security

Where a third person already has possession of title deeds for another purpose an oral communication from a part owner of the property to which the title deeds relate, purporting to make such third person a trustee of the deeds for a creditor, cannot create an equitable mortgage in favour of such creditor (Re Beetham, Ex parte Broderick (1887), 18 Q. although the accompanying memorandum only specifies some of those deeds (g). An equitable mortgage may be created by a deposit of a copy of court rolls (h), a receipt for purchase-money containing the terms of the agreement for purchase and attached to a plan (i), or an agreement for a lease (k), though the lease is afterwards granted on different terms (l), but not, it seems, by a deposit of an attested copy of a lease (m).

143. It is not legal negligence to accept the owner's statement that the deeds deposited are all that are necessary. If the court is satisfied of the good faith of the person who has got a prior equitable charge, and is satisfied that there has been a positive statement, honestly believed, that he has got the necessary deeds, then he is not bound to examine the deeds, nor is he bound by constructive notice of their actual contents or of any deficiencies which by examination he might have discovered in them (n).

mere deposit.

144. A deposit of title deeds does not in itself create a charge, and the mere possession of deeds without evidence of the contract under which possession was obtained, or of the manner in which the possession originated so that a contract may be inferred (o), will not create an equitable security (p). The deposit is a fact which lets in evidence of an intention to create a charge which would otherwise be inadmissible, and raises a presumption of charge which throws upon the debtor the burden of rebutting it (q).

25 L. R. Ir. 58, 284, C. A. In Roberts v. Croft (1857), 24 Beav. 223, a solicitor made a deposit of the title deeds of his estate with a client, but omitting the conveyance to himself; he afterwards deposited the latter with his bankers: it was held that the deposit of the earlier deeds constituted a good equitable mortgage and gave the client priority over the bankers; and see Re Price, Ex parte Pearse and Prothero (1820), Buck, 525.

(q) Russel v. Russel (1783), 1 Bro. C. C. 269; Burgess v. Moxon (1856), 2 Jur. (N. S.) 1059. A mere deposit of title deeds, upon an advance, with intent to create a security thereon, but without a word passing, gives an equitable lien; so that, as between a debtor and creditor, the fact of possession of the deeds raises the presumption that they were deposited by way of security (Ex parte Langston (1810), 17 Ves. 227, 230; Ex parte Mountfort (1808), 14 Ves. 606; Maugham v. Ridley (1863), 8 L. T. 309); but, as against strangers, this is only the case where the possession can be accounted

The delivery by mistake of a box of deeds to a creditor does not constitute him an equitable mortgagee, though the delivery may be prima facie evidence of an intention which throws the burden of proving the negative on the owner (r).

Where deeds are delivered for a special purpose other than putting them in pledge, the further purpose of creating a present security cannot be inferred. Thus, where they are delivered merely for the purpose of enabling a solicitor to prepare a legal mortgage, an equitable mortgage by deposit is not created (s), unless there is an immediate intention to give a security by the deposit, notwithstanding that a formal legal security is also in contemplation (a).

145. When the deposit of deeds is made for the purpose of obtaining credit, it will not cover moneys previously advanced and still due (b), unless an intention to cover them appears from the circumstances (c). A deposit will, however, cover subsequent advances upon parol evidence of an agreement that the security should be so extended, and notwithstanding that the original deposit was accompanied by a memorandum in writing limiting the purpose of the deposit (d); but it will not extend to an advance by a third person unless connected with some dealing with the estate (e), or to a subsequent advance made after a legal mortgage has been taken (f).

146. When the deposit of deeds is made without a memorandum, the delivery should be made to the creditor or his agent, being some person other than the debtor. A deposit with the debtor's for in no other way (Bozon v. Williams (1829), 3 Y. & J. 150, 161), and the simple fact that the title deeds are produced from the custody of a creditor a great number of years after the deposit, without explanation, will not in itself support a claim of a mortgage by deposit (Chapman v. Chapman (1851), 13 Beav. 308). There should be proof of the time when both the loan and deposit were made (Kebell v. Philpott, Kebell v. Daniel (1838), 2 Jur. 739).

If, before the money was advanced, the deeds had been deposited with a view to prepare a future mortgage, such a transaction could not be considered as an equitable mortgage by deposit; but it is otherwise where there is a present advance and the deeds are deposited, under a promise to forbear suing, although they may be deposited only for the purpose of preparing a future mortgage; in such case the deeds are pledged from the very nature of the transaction (*Keys v. wife is not sufficient (g). But a deposit with the debtor's solicitor is sufficient, as he is thereby constituted agent and trustee for the creditor (h); and a solicitor in mortgaging may make a deposit by placing his own deeds in a box containing the papers of his client the mortgagee (i).

charged.

147. The charge created by a deposit of deeds includes all the property comprised in the deeds (j), and extends to every estate and interest possessed by the depositor at the time of the deposit, every interest which he afterwards acquires (k), and all incidental rights, such as the goodwill of a business carried on upon the premises (l). A limited owner can charge only his own estate by a deposit; but parol evidence of the assent of the remainderman is admissible to charge the inheritance (m).

The deposit cannot create an equitable mortgage on property to which the deeds do not relate, notwithstanding that by a misapprehension the creditor believes that they relate to the property (n).

Parting with or loss of deeds.

148. The creditor with whom deeds are deposited does not lose his lien by parting with the deeds for the purpose of allowing a sale to be effected (o), or, if the debtor is the creditor's solicitor, and the deeds remain in his custody as the creditor's agent, by the debtor wrongfully removing them (p). Where neither the deeds nor any memorandum of deposit can be produced, secondary evidence of the deposit may be given upon proof that the deeds have been really lost (q).

Sub-mortgage by deposit.

149. A legal mortgagee may make an equitable sub-mortgage by deposit, and an equitable mortgage by deposit may be sub-mortgaged by redeposit without depositing the memorandum given on the original deposit (r). But the derivative mortgagee must

land.

150. Where land is registered (t), the registered proprietor of any freehold or leasehold land or of a charge may, subject to any registered estates, charges, or rights, create a lien on the land by deposit of the land certificate or certificate of charge; and such lien, subject as aforesaid, is equivalent to a lien created by the deposit of title deeds or of a mortgage deed of unregistered land by an owner entitled in fee simple or for the term or interest created by the lease for his own benefit, or by a mortgagee beneficially entitled to the mortgage (u).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Equitable Charges.

151. An equitable charge is a security which does not transfer the property with a condition for reconveyance, but only gives a right to payment out of the property. It entitles the holder to have the property comprised therein sold to raise the money charged thereon, but it does not amount to an agreement to give a legal mortgage, and the strict mode of enforcing it is by sale and not by foreclosure (v).

Equitable
charges.

152. An agreement to charge real or personal estate, made, for valuable consideration, by a person who has power to create such a charge, operates as a valid equitable charge thereon (a), even though the charge extends to all his existing property (b), and if, at the date of the agreement, the property agreed to be charged has been sold, the charge takes effect on the interest of the person making the charge in the purchase-money (c). A covenant to charge property ascertained or ascertainable creates a binding charge as soon as the property is ascertained (d); and it is sufficient if the land can be ascertained by existing facts and circumstances (e). But a simple covenant or agreement to charge land where no lands in particular are mentioned will not create a charge, neither will an agreement for a personal security with power to call for a real one, or where it otherwise appears that the intention was to rely on the covenant (f).

A valid agreement to charge will be held effectual notwithstanding any mistake which may have occurred in the attempt to effect it (g).

SECT. 3.—Registered Charges on Land.

Charge on
land.

153. In the case of land affected by the Land Transfer Acts (h) every registered proprietor of freehold or leasehold land may charge the land (i) in manner prescribed by the statutory rules with the payment, at an appointed time, of any principal sum of money either with or without interest, or of an annuity or other periodical payment, and the charge may be with or without a power of sale to be exercised at or after an appointed time (k).

Registration of charge.

The charge is completed by the registrar entering on the register the name of the person in whose favour the charge is made as the proprietor of the charge, and the particulars of the charge; and the charges are subject to the provisions as to qualified and possessory titles (l).

A person having the right to be registered as proprietor of land can create a charge on the land before he is himself registered as proprietor, and a charge so made has the same effect as if he were registered (m).

has at a particular time, that covenant will itself make a charge. But where the covenant is to charge not all or any definite portion of a man's estate but only that which is worth £1,000 a year, . . . then from the indefiniteness of the matter referred to there will be no charge unless an instrument is afterwards executed to give effect to the covenant" (Montagu v. Sandwich (Earl) (1886), 32 Ch. D. 525, C. A., per COTTON, L.J., at p. 538); see Lyde v. Mynn (1833), 1 My. & K. 683; *Watson v. (i) Three methods of obtaining a charge on registered land are open, namely:—(1) a statutory instrument of charge completed by registration; (2) a mortgage or charge off the register, protected either by a caution or restriction or by a statutory transfer with a caution to protect the equity of redemption; or (3) a deposit of the certificate (see note (u), p. 83, ante) which may be protected by a notice. (m) Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 9 (6); Land Transfer Rules, 1903, r. 96.

154. A registered charge, in the absence of any entry to the contrary on the register (n), implies a covenant, on the part of the registered proprietor at the time of the creation of the charge, with the registered proprietor of the charge for the time being, to pay the principal sum and interest (o), and in the case of leaseholds a covenant to pay the rent and observe the covenants in the lease (p). The charge also confers on its registered proprietor a power of entry (q), a right to foreclosure (r) and a power of sale (s); and the provisions of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (t), with reference to mortgages are made to apply to registered charges (u).

The instrument of charge must follow a prescribed form, which may be added to or varied (a). There is an exception to this rule in favour of a society registered under the Building Societies Acts (b). In such a case the mortgage may be in such form as is consistent with the rules of the society (c).

155. If the terms of a charge are to be altered after it has been registered, the registrar may, on the application or with the consent of the registered proprietor of the land and of the proprietors of all registered charges of equal or inferior priority, alter the terms of the charge (d).

156. The charge does not confer the legal estate on the chargee, but he is able, by virtue of his power of sale, to confer it on a purchaser by statutory transfer (e). A conveyance of the legal estate may, with the approval of the registrar, be added to the statutory form (f).

Subject to any stipulations (g) varying priorities and appropriate entries thereof made on the register, charges rank according to their priority on the register irrespective of their order of creation. Subject to this exception, the Middlesex Registry Act, 1708 (l), requires that a memorial of every deed and conveyance, whereby any hereditaments in Middlesex are in any way affected in law or equity, shall be registered, and avoids unregistered deeds and conveyances as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration (l). This provision includes an instrument of charge not under seal; and a memorandum of charge accompanying a deposit of deeds (m), an agreement to give a second mortgage (n), and a memorandum of further charge in favour of a registered mortgagee (o) are "conveyances" within the Act (l); but the Act (l) does not apply to an equitable mortgage by deposit without memorandum (p); nor does it apply to the City of London, to compel redemption or to foreclose, for being without condition there can be no forfeiture (f).

160. A Welsh mortgage is a practically obsolete form of security. It is an assurance by which, to secure a debt, the property is conveyed to the creditor without any condition for payment or proviso for reconveyance, the bargain being that until redemption the rents and profits are to be set off against the interest (b). No covenant is implied therein for payment of the principal or interest (c), and no covenant for payment is usually inserted: in its absence the security only creates a debt of a particular nature, and, since the borrower is under no personal obligation to pay the loan, it cannot be sued for (d).

Cassidy* (1889), 24 L. R. Ir. 577, per JOHNSON, J., at p. 578). Lord ST. LEONARDS describes it as "a conditional sale; under it the lender goes into possession of the rents and continues to receive them until the party who borrowed the money chooses to redeem" (Balfe v. Lord (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 480, 487).

The possession and receipt of the rents and profits by the mortgagee is of the essence of the transaction. They must be received either in lieu of interest or for payment of the interest and principal. Where the security is a Welsh mortgage properly so called, and the bargain is that the mortgagee is to take the rents in lieu of interest, the mortgagee is under no liability to account for what he has received. But where the rents are to be applied in reduction of principal and interest an account may be directed (g). After the mortgage is completely satisfied the mortgagor has the full statutory period of twelve years thereafter within which to redeem the property before the mortgagee's possession becomes a bar to redemption (h).

Mortgages by
deeds.

162. Grants of an annuity for the life of the grantor or for a term of years certain, accompanied by a proviso giving the grantor the right of repurchase or redemption on prescribed terms, were at one time common securities (i). In such a transaction the debtor grants not the property, but an annuity or rentcharge issuing thereout with a clause entitling him to repurchase it on payment of a specific sum. A purchase of a redeemable annuity is not to be confused with an advance as a loan. In the latter case the person who receives the money remains a debtor, in the former case he does not (k).

Grants of annuities are perfectly lawful in themselves, and when untainted by fraud the court will not turn such a grant into a simple loan of money repayable with simple interest, but the grantor will have no right to redeem otherwise than in accordance with the terms of the grant (l). Where, however, the court is satisfied that the transaction was intended to be a loan, it will be so treated, and a clause for repurchasing the annuity is considered strong evidence that a loan only was intended (m).

(i) While the usury laws were in force such securities were often entered into to evade those laws. A bonâ fide sale of an annuity, whether for life or for a term certain, did not come within the scope of the usury laws. The question was not whether the grantee ran a risk or not, but whether the transaction was a bonâ fide sale or a loan under cover of a sale. If the transaction was a sale, the fact that the grantee would necessarily receive more than his consideration money, with the legal interest thereon, did not invalidate the transaction (Kenny v. Lynch (1845), 2 Jo. & Lat. 319). Where the annuity was redeemable it was looked upon as only a loan and an evasion of the usury laws (Floyer v. Sherard (1744), Amb. 19). For the law affecting annuities generally, see title RENTCHARGES AND ANNUITIES.

(m) Bulwer v. Astley (1844), 1 Ph. 422.

For the protection of the grantees thereof, annuity deeds (n) must be registered, for a mortgagee of land is not, without express notice of its existence (o), affected by any annuity or rentcharge for life or lives or for any term of years or greater estate determinable on lives charged upon or issuing out of such land unless such annuity or rentcharge has been duly registered (p). SUB-SECT. 1.—Suretyship.

163. For various reasons, such as the insufficiency of the security, or the fact that the subject-matter of the mortgage is an interest in reversion or the like, third persons, such as friends of the borrower, are frequently made parties to mortgages, to guarantee (r) the payment of principal and interest or interest alone, the performance of covenants, or the maintenance of the security. Although a surety only undertakes for the default of another, the practice in mortgage deeds is to make him contract and become bound as a principal so far as concerns the mortgagee, but to let him remain a surety so far as concerns the mortgagor. Accordingly the borrower and surety usually enter into joint and several covenants for payment of principal and interest, with a proviso that although, as between the borrower and the surety, the latter is only a surety, yet, as between the lender and the surety, the latter is to be deemed a principal debtor and not to be released by any indulgences given to the borrower (s).

warrant of attorney to confess judgment by way of collateral security, so as to enable the mortgagee to enter up judgment and issue execution; but there is little advantage in it at the present day, and in modern practice a warrant of attorney is seldom resorted to as a collateral security to a mortgage.

By a warrant of attorney (a) the borrower authorises a judgment to be entered up against him at the suit of the creditor for a specified sum; a defeasance (analogous to the condition of a bond) is subjoined, which prescribes the use to be made of the judgment as a security for the payment of the money advanced and interest, and also, if the circumstances so require, for the performance of ancillary covenants. When judgment has been entered up by virtue of this authority the lender acquires the position and remedies of a judgment creditor.

Formalities.

165. A warrant of attorney must be executed in the presence of a solicitor expressly named by the person giving the warrant of attorney and attending at his request to inform him of the nature and effect of the warrant before it is executed (b). The solicitor must subscribe his name as a witness to the due execution of the warrant, and thereby declare himself to be the solicitor for the person executing it and state that he subscribes as such solicitor (b).

Registration.

If these provisions are not complied with the warrant is deemed fraudulent and void, and it is not rendered valid by proof that the person executing it did in fact understand its nature and effect, or was fully informed of the same (c). The warrant is also deemed fraudulent and void, unless it or a true copy thereof is filed in the Central Office (Bills of Sale Department) within twenty-one days after the execution (d). The judgment to be entered up under the warrant of attorney must be registered and re-registered every five years in order to give it priority over other debts (e).

Bond.

166. A bond (f) by way of collateral security to a mortgage was formerly given, by an instrument separate from the conveyance of the property, for the purpose of suing for the debt; but as an equally effective remedy is given by the covenant for payment in a mortgage, the bond has fallen into disuse in ordinary cases.

SECT. 1.—Absolute Owners of Property.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

167. An absolute owner of property, unaffected by any incapacity arising out of status, can, in exercise of the plenary powers of alienation with which the law invests him or her, mortgage such property (i). Similarly, one of several co-owners, whether joint tenants or tenants in common, can mortgage his individual share of the common property; but in the case of joint tenants such a mortgage severs the joint tenancy (k).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Infants.

168. An infant has no power to bind himself by a contract of mortgage. Any mortgage made by an infant, to secure moneys advanced to him otherwise than for necessities (l), is absolutely void (m); and it seems that an infant, although he can contract for the supply to him of necessities (l), is not liable to repay money lent for the purchase of necessities (n), unless the money is actually applied in payment for necessities purchased, in which case the lender stands in the place of the creditor who was paid out of the money (o). securing money lent for the purchase of necessities appears to be voidable (p).

169. The court has, however, jurisdiction in certain specified cases to mortgage an infant's property and to deal with property vested in an infant as mortgagee (q).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Married Women.

Married women.

170. The power of a married woman to borrow or lend money on mortgage depends on her capacity to undertake obligations and alienate property. Any property over which a married woman has a power of appointment, or which is her separate property without any fetter on alienation, may be disposed of by her by way of mortgage without the concurrence of her husband (r).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Lunatics and Persons of Unsound Mind.

Lunatics.

171. Whether a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition can engage in a mortgage transaction depends upon his general capacity to contract and to acquire and alienate property. As a rule, the transactions of such a person are binding unless it can be proved that the other party or parties to such transactions knew him to be so insane as to be incapable of understanding what he was doing (a).

The court has power to authorise the execution of a mortgage on behalf of a lunatic or person of unsound mind (b), and has also power, which, however, is seldom exercised, to authorise the committee of a lunatic to lend the lunatic's money upon mortgage (c).

When land is vested in an infant as a mortgagee, the court in exercise of the powers given to it by the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), ss. 26, 28, can make an order vesting or releasing and disposing of the land in, to or in favour of such person as may be thought fit; see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 84. Where personalty is vested in an infant as a mortgagee it is conceived that the court has an inherent jurisdiction to deal with such mortgage; see Nunn v. Hancock (1871), 6 Ch. App. 850; Re Wells, Boyer v. Maclean, [1903] 1 Ch. 848 (not following Peto v. Gardner (1843), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 312, and Day v. Day (1845), 9 Jur. 785).

SECT. 1.

Absolute Owners of Property.*Bankrupts.

172. When a person is adjudicated a bankrupt, his property, with some exceptions, passes from him to his trustee in bankruptcy, and therefore he cannot mortgage it (d). But he is not civiliter mortuus, and may mortgage whatever property is allowed by law, as an exception to the general rule, to remain vested in him (e). Thus a bankrupt may mortgage his expectation of a surplus after payment in full of debts proved in and expenses incurred in relation to his bankruptcy (f), or property vested in him upon trust (g), or immovables situated in a foreign country if the lex situs permits him to do so (h).

173. Personal property of the bankrupt, acquired after his bankruptcy, can be effectively mortgaged by him, before the intervention of the trustee in bankruptcy, to any person who is dealing with him in good faith and for value, whether with or without knowledge of the bankruptcy (i).

Property

Independently of this doctrine, a mortgage by a bankrupt may be effective as against his trustee in two cases—first where the mortgage is of an equitable chose in action, and the trustee has not perfected his title by notice (k); secondly, where the trustee has

It is not necessary that the bankrupt should mortgage the surplus expressly as such; if he mortgages specific property, and that specific property is more than sufficient to satisfy creditors, the surplus of such property is validly mortgaged (Bird v. Philpott, supra, following Troup v. Ricardo (1864), 4 De G. J. & Sm. 489, distinguishing Re Austin, Ex parte Sheffield (1879), 10 Ch. D. 434, C. A., and Re Leadbitter (1878), 10 Ch. D. 388, C. But this provision cannot affect the rule of private international law that the lex situs governs the transfer of immovables. Under ibid., s. 24, however, the court has power to compel any bankrupt within its reach to execute such assurance as by the lex situs would vest foreign immovables in the trustee in bankruptcy (Re Harris, Ex parte the Trustee (1896), 3 Mans. 46); and see, generally, title CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., pp. 207, 208.

stood by, and allowed the mortgagee to advance his money upon the supposition that the bankrupt could dispose of the property (l).

174. The trustee in bankruptcy, with the consent of the committee of inspection, may mortgage any part of the property of the bankrupt which has passed to him under the bankruptcy for the purpose of raising money for the payment of the bankrupt's debts (m). A mortgage by a trustee in bankruptcy is exempt from stamp duty (n).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Convicts.

Convicts.

175. A convict, since he cannot enter into a contract or dispose of property (o), has no power to lend or borrow money on mortgage; but the administrator of a convict may mortgage any part of the convict's property (p). Property which is vested in a convict upon trust or by way of mortgage, except as regards any beneficial interest of the convict therein, does not vest in and cannot be mortgaged by his administrator (q).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Partners.

than by deed.

176. A partner (r) has an implied authority to pledge or mortgage (otherwise than by deed) the personal property belonging to the partnership, and probably also the real estate if dealing in it is one of the objects of the partnership, in order to raise money for the carrying on in the usual way of the partnership business, unless the partner so pledging or mortgaging has in fact been precluded from

A mortgage by a trustee in bankruptcy should relieve him of personal liability and should provide that he shall not be bound personally to do anything in contravention of the Bankruptcy Acts and Rules. A receiver cannot mortgage on the strength of a receiving order (Re Wells and Croft, Ex parte Official Receiver (1894), 2 Mans. 41). As to the power of a liquidator to mortgage the company's assets, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 446, 573.

(p) Ibid., s. 12. The administrator must act bonâ fide (Carr v. Anderson, [1903] 1 Ch. 90; affirmed, [1903] 2 Ch. 279, C. A.). The Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), does not appear to give the administrator power to invest capital moneys of the convict upon mortgage, but semble he may under ibid., s. 18, so invest the income of the convict's property; and see, generally, title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 429 et seq. For a form of conveyance of a convict's estate, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XII., p. 546.

thus acting, and the person with whom he is dealing either knows that he has no authority or does not know or believe him to be a partner(s). A partner cannot validly mortgage partnership property, known to be such by the mortgagee, to secure his personal debt, without the knowledge and consent of the other partners (t), and the burden of proving such consent rests on the mortgagee (a).

This authority to mortgage the property of the partnership continues after dissolution so far as may be necessary to wind up the affairs of the partnership and to complete transactions begun but unfinished at the time of dissolution (b).

But neither during the continuance of the partnership nor after dissolution can one partner execute a mortgage deed of partnership property so as to bind the other partners (c) unless special authority is given him to do so (d). It is further conceived that, except in the case above mentioned, he cannot, in the absence of special authority, execute an equitable mortgage of real estate belonging to

Ind. App. 487. But when a partner executes a mortgage deed on behalf of the firm, the partner may be bound though the firm is not bound (Elliot v. Davis (1800), 2 Bos. & P. 338; see also Hawkshaw v. Parkins, supra; Cumberlege v. Lawson (1857), 1 C. B. (N. the partnership. If a partner executes a deed for himself and his partner in the presence and by the authority of his partner, such execution operates as an execution by both (e); and though a mortgage deed, executed by one partner alone, is not at law binding on the firm, yet it may be a good security in equity (f).

177. Where a firm mortgages property, and subsequently an alteration in the firm occurs, whether by the retirement or the admission of a partner or partners or by both, the mortgage is not affected. But if the mortgage was not made by deed (g), its scope may be enlarged or restricted, after an alteration in the partnership, by parol agreement with the creditor, whether express or implied (h).

178. If a partner mortgages his own share in the partnership, the mortgagee takes subject to equities subsisting between the partners (i). Such a mortgagee is not entitled during the continuance of the partnership to interfere in the management, or to require accounts, or to inspect the books of the partnership business (k). He is entitled to an inquiry as to the value of the share at the date when he took possession under his mortgage; but, if a dissolution of the partnership has previously taken place, the date of dissolution is the date at which the necessary accounts ought to be taken (l). He may enforce his security by an action for an account and foreclosure (m); and if the mortgage is made by deed,

If he partially bars his estate tail, so as to create a base fee, the mortgage will vest in the mortgagee an estate which is unimpeachable during the survival of any issue of the tenant in tail, but which is voidable upon the death of the survivor of such issue by any person next entitled in remainder upon the estate tail (s). (r) As early as Taltarum's Case (1472), Y. B. 12 Edw. 4, fo. 19, it was decided that an estate tail could be barred, and as early as Portington's (Mary) Case (1612), 10 Co. Rep. 35 b, it was decided that no provision was valid which restricted the barring of an estate tail, and the same rule applies to the enlargement of a base fee (Dawkins v. Penrhyn (Lord) (1878), 4 App. Cas. 51, 64). Since the 31st December, 1833, the procedure by which estates tail can be barred is governed by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74). As to estates tail and the method of disentailing such estates, see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL. There are three classes of persons who cannot bar their estates tail under any circumstances: (1) tenants in tail of lands, the reversion to which is in the Crown, or tenants in tail who are by any Act of Parliament restrained from barring their estates tail; (2) tenants in tail after possibility of issue extinct; (3) issue inheritable in tail in respect of their expectant estates tail (see Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), ss. 18, 20). Tenants in tail within class (1), except where the entailed land was purchased with money provided by Parliament in consideration of public services, and tenants in tail within class (2) have the same powers of mortgaging as tenants for life (Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 58); see p. 99, post.

(s) Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), ss. 34, 35. This applies also to a tenant in tail in remainder (Hankey v. Martin (1883), 49 L. T. 560, following The Case of Fines (1602), 3 Co. Rep. 84 a). A contract by the tenant in tail to convey the fee simple will not, if the create by his mortgage a fee simple or any interest which will not determine at or before his death, but not so as to bar his estate tail, the mortgage will vest in the mortgagee an estate which is unimpeachable during the life of the mortgagor but voidable upon his death by the entry of the issue in tail (t). If, however, he creates by his mortgage an estate or interest which will not outlast his life, such estate or interest will not be subject to defeasance. Where a tenant in tail in possession of freeholds mortgages the fee simple of the lands entailed, and the mortgage deed is duly enrolled (a), the estate tail is wholly barred. If he is a tenant in tail in remainder, the estate tail will not be wholly barred, unless the consent of the protector of the settlement is obtained (b), or there is no protector in existence, but the mortgage will create in the mortgagee a base fee, which, however, will be capable of enlargement into a fee simple, if there ceases to be a protector, or if the protector subsequently gives his consent (c).

181. Where the tenant in tail mortgages the lands entailed so as wholly or partially to bar the entail, the entail is so far barred not only at law but in equity despite any provision in the deed to the contrary, and the equity of redemption is not resettled, but if the mortgage is only of an estate pur autre vie or a term of years, or creates an interest, charge, lien, or incumbrance in or upon the lands entailed, the estate tail is barred only so far as is

(a) Enrolment was formerly in the Court of Chancery, but is now effected in the Enrolment Department of the Central Office (R. S. C., Ord. 61, r. 9; Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), s. 41). Mortgages of copyholds do not require to be enrolled otherwise than by entry on the court rolls of the manor (ibid., s. 54); see also, as to enrolment, ibid., ss. 73, 74. So long as a disentailing deed is enrolled within six months of execution, it does not matter that it is enrolled after the death of the mortgagor tenant in tail (Re Piers's Estate, Ex parte Browne (1863), 14 I. Ch. R. 452); and see Whitmore-Searle v. Whitmore-Searle, [1907] 2 Ch. 332. It is necessary that an equitable tenant in tail of copyholds should enrol his disposition thereof, and an indorsement by the steward of the manor on a disentailing deed that the same was produced before him at his residence is not a sufficient enrolment (Boyd v. Pawle (1866), 14 W. R. 1009; see also Morgan v. Morgan (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 99). The enrolment in the case of an equitable estate in copyholds, as in the case of freeholds, must take place within six months of execution (Gibbons v. Snape (1863), 1 De G. J. & Sm. 621, C. A., following Honywood v. Foster (No. 1) (1861), 30 Beav. 1). For forms of mortgage, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., p. 553 (by tenant in tail in possession), and p. 662 (by tenant in tail in remainder).

182. The law as to a mortgage of freeholds by a tenant in tail applies to a mortgage of copyholds so far as the circumstances of the different tenures will admit (e). A mortgage by a tenant in tail of the legal estate in copyholds must be made by surrender to the mortgagee, but a mortgage of the equitable estate in copyholds may be made either by surrender or grant (f).

183. A deposit of title deeds by a tenant in tail with or without an agreement to execute a legal mortgage will not bar the estate tail, so as to constitute an equitable mortgage of the fee simple (g). But an agreement to execute a legal mortgage, or otherwise to bar the estate tail, may be specifically enforced against the tenant in tail himself (h).

of raising costs ordered by the court to be paid out of the settled property and raised by mortgage (m), or for the purpose of giving effect to a contract to mortgage entered into by his predecessor in title, if such predecessor could have made the mortgage effective against his successors in title (n).

When a limited owner effects a sale, exchange, or partition in pursuance of the statutory powers (o) conferred upon him, and there is an incumbrance affecting land so sold, exchanged or partitioned, the limited owner can, if he obtains the consent of the incumbrancer, charge the incumbrance on any other part of the settled land by mortgaging either the fee simple or a term of years created therein (p).

given by the Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 11, extend so far as to allow a tenant for life under two deeds, each comprising different property, and forming together a compound settlement (see title SETTLEMENTS), to charge the property passing under one deed for the purpose of discharging an incumbrance on property passing under the other (Re Monson's (Lord) Settlement, [1898] 1 Ch. 427), or to enable him to charge property free from any mortgage debt, but subject to annuities created by the settlement, in order to discharge other property, subject to mortgage debts and the annuities from such debts (Hampden v. Buckinghamshire (Earl), [1893] 2 Ch. 531, C. A.). In Re Clifford, Scott v. Clifford, [1902] 1 Ch. 87, it was held that the Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 11, was not limited to cases where the mortgagee called in his money, but extended to all cases where money was reasonably required having regard to the circumstances of the settled land; see also as to the scope of this provision, Re Coulls' Settled Estates, [1905] 1 Ch. 712. As to what is an "incumbrance" within this provision, see Hampden v. Buckinghamshire (Earl), supra (where a life annuity was held not to be such an incumbrance); Re Smith's Settled Estates, [1901] 1 Ch. 689 (where expenses charged upon settled land under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 257, were held to be such an incumbrance); Re Strangways, Hickley v. Strangways (1886), 34 Ch. D. 423, C. A., and Annesley v. Woodhouse, [1898] 1 I. R. 69 (in which two cases the question whether a trust for accumulation constitutes an incumbrance is discussed). The method of raising expenses payable under the Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), s. 17, provided by ibid., is alternative, and does not take away from the tenant for life the right to pay such expenses himself and mortgage the settled land under the Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 11 (Re Pizzi, Scrivener v. Aldridge, [1907] 1 Ch. 67); see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., pp. 235, 236.

(m) Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 47. This provision is not limited to costs, charges, and expenses incurred in respect of an application to the court, but when the court has ordered the costs of an abortive sale to be paid out of capital moneys as being properly incurred under the Act, it may by virtue of this provision direct that such costs be raised by means of a charge on the settled land (Re Smith's Settled Estates, [1891] 3 Ch. 65).

A rentcharge created under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114), is an incumbrance within the meaning of this provision, and part of the land subject to such rentcharge can be sold free therefrom, and the rentcharge, if the owner thereof consents, charged upon the unsold land (Re

The power of a limited owner to mortgage the whole property subject to the settlement cannot be assigned by him (q); nor can it be released by him, nor will any contract by him not to exercise it be enforceable (r); nor can it be negatived or restricted by any provision in the settlement, nor will any attempt by the settlor or any other person to negative or restrict it be of any effect (s).

185. Every person who is a tenant for life, or who has the powers of a tenant for life within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (t), is a limited owner capable of exercising the powers of mortgaging given by the Act (u). The limited owner, in the exercise of his statutory powers, must have regard to the interests of, and is in the position of a trustee for, all persons entitled under the settlement (v).

186. A limited owner, before exercising his statutory power of mortgaging the settled land, must give to each of the trustees of the settlement and to their solicitor one month's notice by posting registered letters to each of them respectively (a). Consequently,

A marriage settlement by a tenant for life is not an assignment within the meaning of this prohibition (Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 4). Bankruptcy does not prevent a limited owner from exercising his statutory powers (Re Mansel's Settled Estates, [1884] W. N. 209); see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., p. 146, note (p).

(r) Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 51, 52. D. 78, C. A.; and Re Atkinson, Atkinson v. Bruce (1886), 31 Ch. D. 577, C. A.).

(s) See title SETTLEMENTS. A provision giving the trustees the powers of a tenant for life is an attempt to restrict the powers of the actual tenant for life (Re Clitheroe Estate (1885), 31 Ch. D. 464, 469). The notice must be given one month before the actual execution of the mortgage deed (see Marlborough (Duke) v. Sartoris (1886), 32 Ch. D. 616). trustees of the settlement must be in existence for the purpose of being served with such notice and also of receiving the mortgage money (b).

187. A deed of mortgage, executed by a limited owner, and expressed to convey the whole estate or interest comprised in the settlement, has the following statutory effect. It will override, so far as it is expressed or intended to operate, all the limitations, powers, and provisions of the settlement, and all estates, interests, and charges subsisting or to arise thereunder (c). It will, however, be subject to all estates, interests, and charges having priority to the settlement (d). It will not override any estate, interest, or charge conveyed or created for securing money actually raised at the date of its execution (e); nor any lease or easement, or right of common or other right granted or made for value by the limited owner or any of his predecessors in title or any trustees for him or them (f).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Limited Owners with Express Power.

Express
mortgage.

188. Before 1883 it was a common practice to insert in settlements an express power (g) to mortgage the settled property for certain enumerated purposes. This power was usually given to the trustees of the settlement, to be exercised by them, with the consent or by the direction of the tenant for life; but it might be, and in some cases was, given directly to the tenant for life or other limited owner. Express power to mortgage may still be conferred on the trustees of a settlement, or on a limited owner thereunder, if it be considered that the statutory powers (h) do not

If a limited owner has no express power to mortgage, but has an express power to lease, and such power is not limited to a lease at a rack-rent, he may mortgage by demise of a term of years (l).

If a limited owner, with an express power to mortgage or consent to a mortgage, is deprived of his interest either by his own act of alienation or by operation of law, the power is not extinguished, but is still capable of being exercised by him, so far as its exercise does not derogate from or interfere with the interests of his alienee or successor in title (m).

compensation and consideration for and to meet the expenses of such enfranchisement (p).

A similar statutory power is vested in the lord, which expression includes a person with a limited estate in a manor (q), in respect of purchase-money and expenses of purchase, where he purchases the tenant's interest, and expenses incurred by him in enfranchisement proceedings under the Copyhold Act, 1894 (r).

ment.

When any such power is exercised, either by the lord or by the tenant, the charge effected has priority to all incumbrances, whether prior in date or not, affecting the manor or land, except tithe rentcharge or any charge having priority by statute (s).

Further, if after enfranchisement a tenant of copyholds is evicted on the score of the badness of his title, he has a charge on the lands, from which he is evicted, for his consideration money (t).

Inclosure expenses.

190. A limited owner has certain statutory powers of mortgaging for the purpose of paying the expenses arising from the inclosure and allotment of common lands (a).

Tithe
redemption.

191. The expenses of the statutory commutation and redemption of tithes may be charged upon the lands (b) freed from tithe, or the rentcharge substituted for tithe, by any owner of an estate in such land or rentcharge respectively less in the whole than an immediate estate of fee simple or fee tail, or which shall be settled upon any uses or trusts (c).

The Inclosure Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 118), s. 133, allows allotted lands to be charged with "inclosure expenses." The Inclosure (Consolidation) Act, 1801 (41 Geo. 3, c. 109), allows them to be charged with "the expenses incident to and attending the obtaining of an Inclosure Act." Under the Inclosure Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 118), s. 133, a person entitled to mortgage allotted lands may advance the money himself, and the commissioner or commissioners may mortgage the allotment to such person. A mortgage made under either Act must be a mortgage of a term of years, and must contain a proviso for the cesser or an express trust for the reassignment or surrender of the term upon repayment of principal and interest, and a covenant to pay and keep down interest so that the remainderman shall not be burdened with more than six months' arrears of interest (ibid.); and see also title COMMONS AND RIGHTS OF COMMON, Vol. IV., p. 583.

The charge has the same effect as if it were a mortgage secured by deed, and has priority over all other charges and incumbrances (e). A tenant for life may mortgage the land to pay off such charge (f).

of ecclesiastical tithe-owners may be charged upon the benefice. Where a mortgage is made under the Act, interest at the rate of £4 per cent. per annum may be added to the charge, which, however, must be reduced by one-twentieth thereof in each year following the commutation. The power of mortgaging conferred by the Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), was by the Tithe Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 62), s. 16, extended to any corporate body or person, the master or fellows of any college, the dean and chapter of any cathedral or collegiate church, the master or guardian of any hospital, and a parson, vicar, or any other having any spiritual or other ecclesiastical living; and by ibid., s. 17, any ecclesiastical corporation aggregate or collegiate body may charge the expenses of the commutation and redemption of tithes upon lands other than those in respect of which such expenses have been incurred. By the Tithe Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 54), s. 8, the Tithe Commissioners can exercise the powers of charging vested in any spiritual person, where such spiritual person has died or vacated his benefice without exercising them. The power of charging the expenses of redemption of tithe rentcharge is conferred on limited owners by the Tithe Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 73), s. 11, and extended to extraordinary tithe and tithe rentcharge by the Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 54), s. 6 (2). For the redemption of tithe and tithe rentcharge generally, see, besides the enactments cited in this note, the Tithe Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 104), and the Tithe Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 93), and title ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, Vol. XI., pp. 750 et seq.

except upon the ground of a fraud to which the alienee is found to be party or privy (k). An administrator has the same power to mortgage as an executor (l).

195. A personal representative of a person who died since the 31st December, 1897, has the same power to mortgage the freeholds as he has to mortgage the leaseholds of a deceased person (m). But a mortgage of freeholds differs from a mortgage of leaseholds in that some or one only of several joint personal representatives cannot, without the authority of the court, convey freeholds (n). A personal representative can mortgage copyholds to which the deceased person was legally entitled, only when expressly authorised to do so by will (o), or where a testator charges copyholds with debts or legacies, and there is no person to whom the whole of the testator's estate or interest in such copyholds has been devised as trustee (p).

The court has statutory powers to order the money required for the payment of debts of deceased persons to be raised by a mortgage of such person's real estate (q).

(k) For cases in which an executor has mortgaged or pledged assets of his testator, see Mead v. Orrery (Lord) (1745), 3 Atk. 235 (mortgage by executor who was also residuary legatee); *Scott v. SUB-SECT. 2.—Trustees.

SECT. 3.

Fiduciary Owners.Trustee's power to
mortgage.

196. A trustee cannot mortgage the trust property save in pursuance of a power to do so expressly conferred upon him by the instrument creating the trust (r), or in pursuance of the statutory power arising where a testator has charged his real estate, or some portion thereof, with payment of debts and legacies, and devised his whole estate or interest in such real estate, or portion thereof, to such trustee upon trust (s), or in pursuance of an order of the court (t). A power to mortgage will be implied from a power of sale, if the latter is given for the purpose of raising a particular charge, but not if the testator's object is to effect an absolute conversion of his estate (a).

A trustee who mortgages the trust estate does not usually covenant to pay the money borrowed (b). A trustee is under no obligation to exclude the statutory power of sale which is now an implied provision in every mortgage (c), but he may not insert a consolidation clause extending to mortgages other than those made by him as trustee (d).

Cooper* (1853) 16 Beav. 396; Devaynes v. Robinson (1857), 24 Beav. 86. In Ball v. Harris, supra, Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., and in Mills v. Banks (1724), 3 P. Wms. 1, at p. 9, Lord MACCLESFIELD, L.C., stated the law in too wide terms. See also Bennett v. Wyndham (1857), 23 Beav. 521 (where a prohibition against raising a charge by sale was held to be also a prohibition against raising such charge by mortgage); and see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., pp. 298, 299.

(b) See Stroughill v. Anstey, supra, at p. 635, 642. For clauses to this effect, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. V., p. 628; Vol. VIII., pp. 557, 559, 565, 636; Vol. XVI., p. 405. As to the personal liability of a trustee on his covenant in a mortgage, see Watling v. Lewis, [1911] 1 Ch. 414.

(c) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 66; the statutory power is given by ibid., s. 19; see p. 248, post. The cases decided before the Act (Re Chawner's Will (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 569, following Russell v. Plaipe (1854), 18 Beav. 21; Bridges v. Longman (1857), 24 Beav. 27, and Cook v. Dawson (1861), 29 Beav. 123, 128, but dissenting from Clark v. Royal Panopticon (1857), 4 Drew. 26) show that a trustee who was mortgaging the trust estate could give a power of sale.

(d) See Thorne v. Thorne, [1893] 3 Ch. 196. Where, however, a trustee brings within the scope of the mortgage security other payments due from the trust estate, the case appears to be different (Cruikshank v. Duffin (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 555).

(e) If authorised by the settlement, but not otherwise, trustees may lend trust moneys upon the security of personal property (see Mills v. Osborne (1836), 7 Sim. 30). As to the meaning of an authority to invest in "personal security," see Forbes v. Ross (1788), 2 Bro. C. C. 430; Langston v. Ollivant (1807), Coop. G. 33; Pickard v. Anderson (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 608; and see, generally, title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

trust (f), but they must invest trust moneys themselves, and are not justified in handing such moneys to their solicitor and requesting him to invest them upon mortgage (g). They should as a rule investigate the title to the property which constitutes the proposed security (h), and for this purpose they may employ a solicitor (i). But they must take additional precautions if they employ the solicitor who is acting for the mortgagor (k).

198. Trustees in lending money upon mortgage must take care that they obtain complete control of the legal estate. Accordingly it is improper for them, in the absence of an express power in the trust instrument, to invest upon either an equitable (l) or a contributory mortgage (m). They must satisfy themselves as to the adequacy of the proposed security for the sum intended to be (f) The Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 1, authorises investment on real or heritable securities in England or Ireland. Before the Trust Investment Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 32), the better view was that trustees could not invest trust moneys on mortgages of land without express authorisation by the trust instrument, but settlements commonly contained a power to invest on real security. As to whether an investment upon mortgage of the undertaking, future calls, rates, tolls, and sums of money belonging to a railway company, and arising under their Act, is an investment upon real security, see Mant v. Leith (1852), 15 Beav. 524. Such an investment is not covered by the phrase "security by way of mortgage of any freehold, copyhold, or leasehold hereditaments" (Mortimore v. Mortimore (1859), 4 De G. & J. 472, C. A.). A loan of trust moneys upon the security of a judgment is not authorised by a power to invest on any mortgage of freehold or leasehold estates, or any other real securities (Johnston v. Lloyd (1844), 7 I. Eq. R. 252). A loan of trust moneys upon the security of a long term of years in freeholds does not come under the description "real security" (Re Chennell, Jones v. Chennell (1878), 8 Ch. D. 492, C. A.; Re Boyd's Settled Estates (1880), 14 Ch. D. 626; Leigh v. Leigh (1886), 56 L. J. (CH.) 125). But, as to renewable leaseholds in Ireland, see Macleod v. Annesley (1853), 16 Beav. 600.

As to how far the trustees of capital moneys are bound to follow directions under the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 22 (2), given by a tenant for life to invest capital moneys upon a particular mortgage, see Re Hotham, Hotham v. Doughty, [1902] 2 Ch. 575, C. A.; and see title SETTLEMENTS.

(h) As to the length of title which trustees can accept, see Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 8 (2); title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES. As to investigation of title to land, see title SALE OF LAND.

Browne*, [1902] 1 Ch. 785, C. A. In Ireland, however, where there is a system of land registration, there have been decisions to the effect that an investment by trustees upon a second mortgage might not be improper (Smithwick v. Smithwick (1861), 12 I. Ch. R. 181; Crampton v. Walker (1893), 31 L. R. Ir. 437; see also Chapman v. Browne, supra, and Waring v. Waring, supra).

An investment on mortgage of property part of which is let on weekly tenancies is not necessarily improper (o).

expressed that either set of mortgagees might sell); Stokes v. Prance, [1898] 1 Ch. 212, per STIRLING, J., at p. 223, following Re Massingberd's Settlement, Clark v. Trelawney (1890), 63 L. T. 296, C. A.; see also Re Dive, Dive v. Roebuck, [1909] 1 Ch. 328. In Re Godfrey, Godfrey v. Faulkner (1883), 23 Ch. D. 483, the contributory mortgage was expressly authorised by the trust deed. In Re Walker, Walker v. Walker (1890), 59 L. J. (CH.) 386, KEKEWICH, J., at p. 389, expressed the opinion that there was not so strong an objection to a contributory investment when there was the same set of trustees for different children and grandchildren as when there was a contributory mortgage in the names of two different sets of trustees claiming under different instruments, as was the case in Webb v. Jonas (1888), 39 Ch. D. 660. In Jones v. Julian (1890), 25 L. R. Ir. 45, and Re Turner, Barker v. Ivimey, [1897] 1 Ch. 536, the fact that the security was over an undivided share, and thus the trustees' control of it was less, was one of the considerations which induced the court to hold the investment to be a breach of trust.

(n) Jones v. Julian, supra; Re Olive, Olive v. Westerman (1886), 34 Ch. D. 70, per KAY, J.; Shaw v. Cates, [1909] 1 Ch. 389. The trustees should not be content with an out of date valuation (Macleod v. Annesley (1853), 16 Beav. 600; compare Re Godfrey, Godfrey v. Faulkner, supra); nor with a valuation made by or on behalf of the mortgagor (Ingle v. Partridge (No. 2) (1865), 34 Beav. 411; Walcott v. Lyons (1886), 54 L. T. 786; Shaw v. Cates, supra); but they are not bound to inquire whether their valuer has at any time advised the mortgagor (Re Solomon, Nore v. Meyer, [1912] 1 Ch. 261). Trustees must choose a valuer themselves, and not follow blindly the guidance of their solicitor (Fry v. Tapson (1884), 28 Ch. D. 268). They may, however, ask him to name some valuers for them to choose from (ibid.). As to the meaning of instructing a valuer "independently" of the owner of the property, see Re Solomon, Nore v. Meyer, supra, at p. 956. If trustees do not employ a local valuer, they must show circumstances to explain their selection (Budge v. Gummow (1872), 7 Ch. App. 719). If a valuer properly appointed makes his valuation on a wrong principle, e.g., upon the cost of erecting buildings, the trustees, having employed a skilled agent, are not liable (Re Pearson, Oxley v. Scarth (1884), 51 L. T. 692). As to the amount which it is proper to lend, see Leahey v. Whiteley (1887), 12 App. Cas. 727, 733; Stickney v. Sewell (1835), 1 My. & Cr. 8, per PEPPERS, M.R., at p. 15.; Stretton v. Ashmall (1854), 3 Drew. 9; Macleod v. Annesley, supra; Hoey v. Green, [1884] W. N. 236; Re Olive, Olive v. Westerman, supra, per KAY, J., at p. 73; Palmer v. Emerson, [1911] 1 Ch. 758 (a case of business premises); Re Solomon, Nore v. Meyer, supra. But the rule as to lending two-thirds or one-half of the amount of the valuation is not inflexible (see cases last cited); as to loans of not more than two-thirds of the amount of the valuation, see the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 8 (1); title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES. In considering the adequacy of a security the income derived from it must be considered as well as its capital value (Macleod v. Annesley, supra; Re Somerset, Somerset v. Poulett (Earl), [1894] 1 Ch. 231, C. A., per KEKEWICH, J., at p. 247). In some cases trustees would not be justified in lending even one-half the valuation (Leahey v. Whiteley, supra; Smethurst v. Hastings (1885), 30 Ch. D. 490). As to the duty of the valuer, see Re Solomon, Nore v. Meyer, supra, at pp. 274, 276, 278, 282, 283; see, further, title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

trustees.

Trustees may invest upon a sub-mortgage (p), but not upon a stock mortgage (q).

It should not, unless in exercise of an express authority, contain a provision that the mortgage shall not be called in for a period of years (s). The statutory power of sale (t) ought not as a rule to be excluded where the mortgagees are trustees, but the exclusion of such power of sale is not necessarily a breach of trust (u).

200. A company which is incorporated by charter can, by deed under its corporate seal, mortgage any part of its property in the same way as can a natural person, who is sui juris, unless perhaps it is prohibited by some special restriction inserted in its charter (v). Corporations created by statute derive their powers of borrowing money upon mortgage from the statutes under which they are incorporated. They cannot lawfully borrow, when any such enactment forbids them to do so, nor indeed without express statutory authority, where the borrowing is not properly incident to the course and conduct of their business (w). (k) See title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 361. In taking a mortgage from a local authority, the main questions which should be considered are (1) what security can the local authority give, e.g., land or rates; (2) what consents (if any) are necessary to the mortgage, e.g., the consent of the Local Government Board; (3) whether there is a maximum time within which the mortgage money must be repaid; (4) what limit (if any) there is to the borrowing powers of the local authority; and (5) whether there is any special form of mortgage prescribed in the schedule of or otherwise by any statute for the particular case. These questions can be answered by referring to the various statutes, which govern the borrowing powers of the local authority concerned. A county council can advance money on mortgage for the purchase of small holdings; see title SMALL HOLDINGS AND SMALL DWELLINGS. created by such an instrument as is operative to transfer the legal estate. A conveyance or an appointment under a power of such freehold estate as the mortgagor is empowered to appoint in the property is the usual method adopted.

SECT. 1.
Freeholds.

Apart from the method of passing the legal estate, varied according to the character of the property or the estate, power, or interest of the mortgagor, all ordinary legal mortgages are framed on the same general lines. Special circumstances may require variations in non-essentials, such as recitals, to make the record of the transaction, or the estate of the mortgagor, more clear, but in the essentials there is at the present day little variation. These essentials are (1) a covenant to pay the principal debt and interest on a given date; (2) a covenant to pay interest in the event of default in payment of the principal on the day named; (3) the conveyance of the mortgaged property; (4) the proviso for redemption; and (5) such variations of the statutory provisions with regard to mortgages as the arrangement between the parties calls for.

provisions.

206. The first operative part of a mortgage is usually the covenant by the mortgagor to pay the principal and interest on a day named (t). One object in placing it at the commencement of the security is to mark the character of the obligation, that is, a personal debt for which the property assured is only the collateral security. It is independent of any other part of the deed, so as to payment.

Vol. III., p. 43; Vol. VIII., pp. 516 et seq., 746, 754; Vol. XIV., p. 295; Vol. XVI., pp. 271, 387 et seq.; for further charges, see ibid., Vol. VIII., pp. 800 et seq., 815.

(t) If there is no covenant and no accompanying bond, there is still an implied promise to pay, and if there is a time fixed, either by recital or otherwise, for the repayment, in many cases depending upon the construction of the instrument, the court will even imply a covenant to pay (Sutton v. Sutton (1882), 22 Ch. D. 511, C. A., per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 515; see King v. King (1735), 3 P. Wms. 358). As to implied contracts generally, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 463 et seq. The promise to pay implied in an instrument under seal may amount either to a covenant or a simple contract to pay. A mere admission of a debt by recital, even in a deed poll, where no other object is declared by the deed, implies a covenant for payment (Turner v. Wardle (1834), 7 Sim. 80; Brice v. Carre (1661), 1 Lev. 47; Saltoun v. Houstoun (1824), 1 Bing. 433; Marryat v. Marryat (1860), 28 Beav. 224, 226). But an acknowledgment for a collateral purpose will not have that effect. Accordingly, a recital that a debt is due, in the transfer of a mortgage (Courtney v. Taylor (1843), 6 Man. & G. 851), or in a mortgage to secure the debt (Marryat v. Marryat, supra; Isaacson v. Harwood, Brook v. Harwood (1868), 3 Ch. App. 225), or in a conveyance in trust to secure it (Jackson v. North Eastern Rail. Co. (1877), 7 Ch. D. 573), or in an assignment for the benefit of a creditor (Stone v. Van Heythuysen (1854), Kay, 721), will not convert a debt into a specialty. But a deed which, after reciting a simple contract debt, contained an agreement to execute a mortgage "including all powers covenants and clauses incidental and necessary thereto," was held to convert the debt into a specialty, as that would be the effect of the security agreed to be given (Saunders v. Milsome (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 573). A person named party to a deed, the terms of which would create a contract, is not a specialty debtor if he has not executed the deed, although he has acted under it (Richardson v. Jenkins (1853), 1 Drew. 477). As to covenants arising by construction, see, generally, title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., pp. 477 et seq.

- SECT. 1.
Freeholds. — constitute in itself a perfect obligation upon which the mortgagee may maintain an action without reference to the character of the deed as a mortgage.
- Perpetual loan Since every loan transaction implies a right to be repaid (a), if a person lending money is never to have his principal back, there must be something very definite and clear showing that such was the condition of the contract (b).
- Date for payment. Fixing a day for payment does not generally indicate an intention of the parties that actual payment shall be made on the named date, but only that the mortgagee may call for payment on or at any time after that date if so minded, but not before (c). The date fixed is usually six calendar months from the date of the loan or deed, but may be at the end of three months or any other period, or the loan may be made repayable upon demand.
- Payment by instalments. The principal may also be made repayable by instalments, with a stipulation that if the instalments and interest are duly paid the repayment of the principal shall not be otherwise enforced (d).
- When the principal debt is agreed to be repayable by instalments (e), the intention of the parties is assumed to be that the whole sum shall become immediately payable if default is made in regular payment of the instalments. This is provided for either (1) by a covenant to pay the principal sum at a given date, with a proviso that if the said sum shall be paid by the instalments therein mentioned the lender will not require payment otherwise; or (2) by a direct covenant to pay by instalments, with a proviso that in case of default in payment of any instalment the whole debt shall become immediately payable. Such a proviso is not in the nature of a penalty and is binding (f).
- Payment on demand. A covenant to pay the principal money "immediately on demand" or "immediately after notice" implies such reasonable time as allows the debtor to go to his bankers or the like for the money, or otherwise comply with the demand (g). If the demand is by a person representing himself to be an agent of the mortgagee the mortgagor is entitled to have time to inquire into the truth of the alleged agency (h).
- Payment of interest. 207. The covenant fixing the date of payment generally provides for interest in the meantime (i). But this is not necessary, for a mortgage, whether legal or equitable, like a bond (j), carries interest although not expressly reserved (k). This, however, does not apply if the instrument expressly provides for reconveyance on repayment of the principal only (l).

SECT. 1.
Freeholds.

208. In every case in which it is not contemplated that the principal should be actually paid on the day appointed, it is usual to insert a covenant for payment of the interest. This enables the interest to be sued for apart from the principal, though a separate covenant is not absolutely necessary for this purpose (m).

Payment of
default.

To induce punctual payment a proviso is often inserted for reduction of the rate of interest if paid within the time prescribed (n). This is legal, and the mortgagor must pay the higher rate unless payment is made within the stipulated time (o). The same rule applies in the case of the principal where prompt payment is the consideration for which the creditor agrees to forgo part of his claim (p); for the reservation of a right to have full payment of money actually due, should there be a failure to pay a smaller sum on a day certain, cannot be treated as a penalty (q).

Reduction on punctual
payment.

Where the proviso is for reduction of interest on punctual payment, a mortgagee in possession may charge the mortgagor with the

R. 8 Eq. 331); so also where a principal sum is charged on property by order of the court (Lippard v. Ricketts (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 291). "Every case that has been cited involves the principle, and the cases have established, that where no interest has been stipulated for, nevertheless the deposit or mortgagee has a right to interest" (Re King, Ex parte Furber (1881), 17 Ch. D. 191, per BACON, V.-C., at p. 196). A power to charge an estate with a specific sum of money without mentioning interest includes a power to charge with interest (Kilmurry (Lord) v. Geery (1713), 2 Salk. 538). As to implied rights to interest, see, further, pp. 225 et seq., post; title MONEY AND MONEY-LENDING, pp. 38 et seq., ante.

(p) Where a mortgagee agreed to take a portion of his debt in lieu of the whole upon payment on a given day, the court refused to grant relief against the effect of non-payment on that day (Ford v. Chesterfield (Earl) (1854), 19 Beav. 428).

higher rate although he receives rent more than sufficient to pay the interest, and even though no interest was in arrear at the time of his taking possession (r). The receipt of rents by the mortgagee is not a payment by the mortgagor or by anyone on his behalf. The mortgagee receives rents which are his own, subject to the right of redemption (s). Under a proviso for the capitalisation of interest if it should be in arrear for twenty-one days, a mortgagee who enters into possession and has in his hands rents sufficient after deducting proper outgoings for payment of interest cannot claim that the interest is in arrear within the meaning of the proviso (t).

for higher rate.

An agreement for increasing the rate of interest on failure in punctual payment is regarded as a penalty against which the courts will grant relief (a).

Absence of provision for
interest.

209. If the mortgage makes provision for payment of the principal on a day certain, with interest at a fixed rate down to that day, there is no implied contract for the continuance of interest at the same rate or at any rate at all after that day. Interest is given in such cases, not as interest payable under the contract, but by way of damages for detention of the debt (b).

interest by way of damages.

210. The rate of interest expressed in the mortgage, if not above 5 per cent., was usually given, and it was reduced to 5 per cent. if the rate in the deed was above that amount (c); and this rule will generally be still observed, though the court is not bound to give interest above the regular mercantile rate (d), and in any case a distinct stipulation as to interest will be binding (e).

Agreement not to call in principal.

211. If a mortgage contains an unqualified stipulation that the principal money shall not be called in for a certain time it is binding though the interest fall into arrear, but the understanding of the parties is generally that such an indulgence is conditional upon punctual payment of the interest (f), and upon an agreement for a mortgage with a stipulation that the principal is not to be called in for a given period the mortgage must be framed to make postponement conditional upon punctual payment of interest (g). Under an agreement to forgo the right to call in the debt for a term if the interest is punctually paid, and the interest is not paid punctually, the right to call in the principal accrues and there is no equitable relief (h). Nor does the mortgagee by the subsequent receipt of interest waive his right to call in the principal before the end of the term (i).

212. When several persons advance money on mortgage there is a presumption that the money belongs to them in severalty although the conveyance was made to them as joint tenants (k). To obviate this, when trustees lend, it is usual to insert a declaration that the money belongs to the lenders on a joint account (l). In the case of a mortgage on or after the 1st January, 1882, money advanced by more persons than one is deemed to belong to the survivor either where the advance is expressly stated to be on a joint account, or where the security is not expressly made to persons in shares (m). As from that date an expression of the joint account is not necessary, though it is convenient as a specific statement of the rights of the mortgagees (n).

Several

A statement that the money belongs to the mortgagees on a joint account does not affect their rights inter se if, in fact, they are entitled to the money as tenants in common (o).

a proviso or condition for reconveyance on payment of the mortgage debt and interest (p). Occasionally, but very seldom, it is made by a conveyance to the lender upon trust for sale in case of non-payment of the debt on a certain day with a declaration that the mortgagee may enter and take the rents and apply them in keeping down the interest (q).

Deed necessary.

Statutory form.

214. A legal mortgage of an interest in hereditaments, whether corporeal or incorporeal, requires to be by deed (r).

A mortgage of freehold or leasehold land by way of statutory mortgage may be made in the form prescribed by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (s), which is deemed to include covenants for payment of principal and interest and a proviso for redemption.

Extent of estate conveyed.

215. When a person who has several estates and interests in land purports to convey all his estate and interest, the instrument operates to pass every estate and interest vested in him although not vested in him in the character in which he became a party to it (t). Ordinarily a person cannot convey a greater estate in property than that which he possesses. But where a mortgagor who has not the legal estate in fee simple purports to convey it and subsequently acquires it, he and all persons claiming under him will be estopped as against the mortgagee from denying that the legal estate passed by the conveyance (u). The deed must, however, contain a precise and specific averment that the conveying party has the legal estate (a). If a mortgagor with a defective title

SECT. 1.
Freeholds.

216. A mortgage in fee, whether legal or equitable, comprises, and that without specific mention, all fixtures which at the date of the mortgage (d) are, or at any time afterwards during its continuance (e) shall be, annexed to the land. This rule applies whether the security is a legal mortgage by deed or an equitable mortgage by deposit, and whether the deposit is or is not accompanied by a memorandum (f).

Fixtures.

Chattels purchased on the hire system and so attached to the land as to become fixtures, although affixed after the date of the mortgage, become subject to the mortgage (g). If, however, the mortgagor is a trader and in possession of the premises, the mortgagee may be taken to have authorised the mortgagor to hire and fix to his premises chattels necessary for his business, and so as to entitle the mortgagor or the owner to remove them at the end of the time for which they were hired. But the removal must be effected before the mortgagee has taken possession (h).

A mere equitable mortgagee does not gain priority over a hire-purchase agreement in respect of the chattels comprised in the agreement (i).

Accretions.

217. Everything that the mortgagor adds to the property to improve its value must be taken to be an accretion for the benefit of the mortgagee (l). In like manner, additions made by a second mortgagee enure to the benefit of the first mortgagee (m).

Compensation money.

218. Money paid for statutory compensation for the licence of a mortgaged public-house belongs to the mortgagee as part of the mortgage security (n); and when mortgaged property is taken by a railway company under compulsory powers, the amount apportioned for loss of profits in carrying on the business belongs to the mortgagee (o).

Goodwill of business.

219. There are certain kinds of goodwill (p) to which a mortgagee is entitled. The goodwill which attaches to a particular house increases the value of that house, and therefore the mortgagee is entitled to it (q). But goodwill attaching to personal reputation which a man has made for himself does not go to the mortgagee of the house, but is a thing personal to the man whose skill and whose name have acquired the goodwill (r). Nor will the goodwill or moneys.

220. All money received on an insurance effected on the mortgaged property must, if the mortgagee so requires, be applied by the mortgagor in making good the loss or damage in respect of which the money is received. On the other hand, and without prejudice to any obligation to the contrary imposed by law or by special contract, a mortgagee may require that all money received under an insurance be applied in or towards discharge of the money due under his mortgage (a).

221. In practice, mortgages of life estates in realty are still met with in the shape of a demise of the property for ninety-nine years if the mortgagor should so long live, instead of a conveyance outright of the mortgagor's whole life estate. This was done inasmuch as it was thought the latter course deprived the mortgagor of the powers of leasing and consenting to sales annexed by the settlement to the life estate. The contrary has, however, been decided, and it is settled that the powers are exercisable with the consent of the alienee of the tenant for life whatever may be the form of the mortgage (b). In the same way the consent of his incumbrancers will enable a tenant for life to exercise the powers conferred on him by the Settled Land Act, 1882 (c). Mortgages of life estates are now usually made by a grant of the entire estate of the tenant for life.

life estates.

222. The proper form of proviso for redemption is that if the mortgagor, or any person claiming under him, shall on a given day pay to the mortgagee the mortgage debt and interest thereon at the rate mentioned in the preceding covenant, the mortgagee shall at any time thereafter, at the request and cost of the mortgagor or the person claiming under him, reconvey the mortgaged premises to the mortgagor or as he shall direct (d). before the day of payment appointed in the proviso for redemption (e). A stipulation in a mortgage that the principal debt shall not be called in for a given period (f) is often accompanied by a mutual stipulation that the mortgagor shall not be entitled without the mortgagee's consent to pay off or redeem the mortgage before the expiration of the period (g). Although the law will not allow a mortgagor to be precluded from redeeming altogether (h), yet he may be precluded from redeeming for a fixed period, such as five or seven years (i); but that does not prohibit the court in a proper case from preventing the application of the clause if it is too large or there are circumstances connected with the proviso which renders it, in the opinion of the court, unreasonable and oppressive (k). A proviso against redemption for a period is not binding in the absence of a mutual provision for the continuance of the loan for that period (l).

Change in
estate by virtue of
redemption.

Difficulties sometimes arise with regard to provisos for redemption where the prescribed destination of the estate when reconveyed does not follow the state of the title as existing at the time of the mortgage, and the question is whether the title to the equity of redemption is to be considered as thereby altered or not. The result of the authorities is that the presumption is that limitations in the proviso for redemption different from the previous limitations of the property are not intended to affect the rights of the parties further than is necessary to effect the object immediately contemplated (m).

Power of sale.

223. An important part of a mortgage is the power to sell the property in default of payment of the debt. An express power is seldom now inserted, reliance being placed upon the statutory power (n).

Repair.

224. There is no statutory obligation on a mortgagor to keep the premises in repair, so that provision upon the subject should be made where the nature of the property so requires (o).

Insurance.

225. As to insurance, a mortgagee under a deed made after the 31st December, 1881, has power at any time after the date of the deed to insure, and keep insured, against fire any building, effects, or property of an insurable nature comprised in the mortgage, and the premiums paid are a charge on the mortgaged property so as to carry interest at the same rate as the mortgage money (p). The amount of the insurance effected must not exceed the amount specified in the mortgage deed, or if no amount is so specified, must not exceed two-thirds of the value of the property; and no insurance is to be effected when the deed contains a declaration that no insurance is required, or where an insurance is kept up on behalf of the mortgagor in accordance with the mortgage deed (q).

SECT. 1.
Freeholds.

226. The absolute covenants for title formerly expressed in a mortgage may be implied by the mortgagor conveying "as beneficial owner." The covenants so implied are for right to convey, for quiet enjoyment after default, for freedom from incumbrances, and for further assurance (r); and where the mortgage is of leaseholds, the further covenant that the lease is valid and that the rents and covenants have been paid and performed, and for the indemnity of the mortgagee in respect of the rents and covenants in the future (s). In the case of a person joining in the assurance, but having no beneficial interest in the property, he will convey as trustee or as mortgagee, which will only imply a covenant against incumbrances. In practice the implied covenants for title are relied upon in drafting mortgages.

Covenants
for title.

Some powers conferred by statute are often excluded or qualified. Thus a mortgage frequently imposes restrictions upon the leasing power given to a mortgagor by statute (t) by providing that the mortgagor shall not exercise it without the written consent of the mortgagee (a).

Leasing
powers.

Sometimes an attornment clause is inserted when the mortgagor is himself in occupation of all or any part of the mortgaged property; but such a clause is only of use to enable the mortgagee to obtain possession by summary procedure (b).

227. When a mortgage is completed the mortgagor is liable to pay to the mortgagee the expenses incident to the transaction (c). The mortgagee is primarily liable to his own solicitor for those expenses (d). The mortgagor is liable to pay over to the mortgagee

(p) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 19 (1) (ii.). The premiums are only a charge on the property, and cannot be recovered from the mortgagor as a debt; so the practice still continues of inserting a covenant for their repayment in the mortgage deed; see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., pp. 502, 511.

(b) As to attornment, see p. 159, post.

(c) The same conveyancing practice as is followed in the case of sale (see title SALE OF LAND) is adopted in the case of mortgages; thus the mortgagor's solicitor deduces the title, while the mortgagee's solicitor investigates the title and prepares the mortgage deed. As to solicitors' remuneration in general, see title SOLICITORS.

what the latter pays to his own solicitor, but there is no debt until the transaction is completed. If the transaction falls through, the intending mortgagee cannot recover his expenses from the intending mortgagor, and to avoid that difficulty it is the practice of solicitors for intending mortgagees before engaging in a mortgage transaction to obtain an undertaking by the intending borrower's solicitor (e), or by the borrower, to pay the expenses. When the transaction is completed, the practice is to deduct those charges out of the advance (f).

Costs of

228. A solicitor, to whom either alone or jointly with any other person a mortgage is made, or his firm, may receive the same costs for work done in respect of the mortgage as if the mortgage had been made to a stranger who had employed the solicitor or his firm to transact the business, and, in case a mortgage is made or transferred to him, or to him jointly with another person, to charge against the security the same costs as if the mortgage had been made and remained vested in a person who was not a solicitor who had employed him or his firm to do any business with respect to the mortgage or the property comprised therein (g).

SECT. 2.—Copyholds.

copyholds.

229. Copyholds properly so called, as distinguished from customary freeholds, are conveyed by surrender and admittance, or by some statutory assurance made with the lord's concurrence which has the same effect (h). Both surrender and admittance, or their statutory substitute, must, however, be present to complete the legal title of the alienee. Copyholds may be surrendered absolutely or on condition, and the latter is the usual mode of creating a mortgage.

230. The mortgage in practice is effected by a deed containing a covenant by the mortgagor to surrender the property to the lord of the manor to the use of the mortgagee (i), subject to a condition that the surrender shall be void on payment of the principal and interest on a given day. This condition is in substance the same as the proviso for redemption in a mortgage of freeholds (k). The deed also contains a covenant for payment of principal and interest, and other clauses required by the nature of the property, as in the case of a mortgage of freeholds (l). Where the mortgage is of renewable copyhold for lives, the deed should contain a covenant for obtaining the proper renewals.

SECT. 2.
Copyholds.

231. The covenant to surrender is followed by a conditional surrender in accordance with the covenant in the deed (m). The lord is not bound to accept a surrender to such uses as the mortgagee may appoint, but only to the use of the mortgagee (n). The person to whom the conditional surrender is made seldom takes admission, as that would involve payment of a fine (o). Until the mortgagee is admitted, the mortgagor remains tenant on the court rolls and liable to the lord for services and for the purpose of forfeiture (p), and, as long as the lord has a tenant on the rolls, that is all that he can ordinarily require, but a special custom enabling the lord to compel admittance of a surrenderee is said to be valid (q). All costs relating to the completion of the surrender must be borne by the mortgagor (r).

Conditional
surrender.

If the mortgagor refuses to make the conditional surrender, a vesting order can be made in favour of the mortgagee, and therefore an express declaration of trust of the copyholds which was formerly in use is not necessary (s). If the mortgagor has not himself been admitted, he may be ordered to procure himself to be admitted and then surrender to the mortgagee (a).

Vesting order.

Admittance.

(l) See pp. 113 et seq., ante.

(m) See Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. V., pp. 209, 212; Vol. VIII., p. 614. An actual surrender to the lord by the mortgagor, involving an entry of that fact on the court rolls, is necessary to prevent a second mortgagee without notice from obtaining a surrender to himself, in which case he may acquire the legal estate and gain priority (Oxwick v. Plumer (1708), Bac. Abr., tit. Mortgage (E.), 3). To prevent a second mortgagee obtaining priority, therefore, the mortgage money should not be paid until the surrender is made, and when an immediate surrender is impracticable, the mortgagee should take a power of attorney to surrender for the mortgagor. But a legal mortgagee may be postponed to a prior equitable mortgagee of whose security he had actual or constructive notice. An equitable mortgage of copyholds may be created by the mere deposit of the copy of the court rolls; see pp. 78, 80, ante; title COPYHOLDS, Vol. VIII., p. 94. It is, therefore, not sufficient for the protection of the mortgagee to search the court rolls for incumbrances; he ought to require the mortgagor to produce an abstract of his title and the copy of his admittance, or account reasonably for its absence (Whitbread v. Jordan (1835), 1 Y. & C. (EX.) 303).

SECT. 2.

Copyholds.Covenants
for title.

232. The deed of covenant to surrender, if made before the conditional surrender, is a "mortgage" within the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (b). And when in a mortgage made after the 31st December, 1881, the mortgagor covenants to surrender as "beneficial owner," the statutory covenants for title are implied therein (c).

Power of sale.

A covenant to surrender by deed also implies a power of sale enabling the mortgagee by deed to convey the property for such estate and interest as is subject to the mortgage (d).

Title relates
surrender.

233. Although the legal title of a mortgagee is not complete until actual admittance, yet as against all persons but the lord the title of a surrenderee after admittance is perfect as from the time of the surrender, and will relate back to it and defeat the title of all intermediate incumbrancers, for the admittance is only a circumstance required by law for the sake of the lord (e), and where by the custom of a manor no time is limited for presenting a surrender, an incumbrancer whose surrender has not been enrolled until long after a subsequent incumbrance will not be postponed although the subsequent incumbrancer had no notice of the charge (f).

of mortgage.

234. If the money is repaid before the admittance of the mortgagee, the mortgagee simply acknowledges satisfaction and authorises the steward to enter the acknowledgment on the court rolls (g), and thereupon the mortgagor becomes possessed of his old estate and no readmission is required (h). But if the mortgagee, in apprehension of default or for some other reason, is actually admitted, then on payment off he must resurrender and the mortgagor requires a new admittance (i).

SECT. 3.—*Leaseholds.*Mortgages of leaseholds.

235. Mortgages of leaseholds are effected either by way of assignment of the whole term or by way of subdemise (k). The former method is adopted only when the rent is small and the

(i) Not only does this involve the payment of another fine, but such readmission of the mortgagor creates a new estate in him, altering in some cases the descent of the property, since he is then in the same position as if he had himself acquired the property by purchase (Doe d. Harman v. Morgan (1797), 7 Term Rep. 103). For form of readmittance of a mortgagor where the mortgagee has been admitted, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. V., p. 223.

(k) For a statutory form of mortgage, either by assignment or subdemise, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., p. 626. For a lessee's covenants are not burdensome (l), for the effect of an assignment is to establish a privity between the lessor and the mortgagee, so that the latter can be sued for rent and breach of covenant (m). The alternative course is to subdemise the property to the mortgagee for the whole of the term, less one or more days (n). Under this form of security the mortgagee is under no personal liability to the lessor (o). The only objection to it is that it leaves the nominal reversion outstanding in the mortgagor. To obviate this it is the practice to insert in the mortgage a declaration by the mortgagor that he is a trustee of the head term in trust for the mortgagee, but subject to the right of redemption. This is supplemented by a power for the mortgagee to remove the mortgagor and appoint a new trustee of the head term in the place of the mortgagor (p). Under these provisions a mortgagee can appoint a nominee of his own to be trustee in the place of the mortgagor and vest the head term in the new trustee (q). A power of attorney to assign the nominal reversion is sometimes inserted.

SECT. 3.
Leaseholds.

236. In the case of a mortgagor expressed to convey leaseholds as beneficial owner there are implied covenants that the lease is valid, and that all the rents and covenants have been paid and observed, and also that the person conveying will pay the rent and perform the covenants, and keep the mortgagee indemnified against non-payment or non-observance of the same respectively (r).

Covenants for title.

237. In the case of renewable leaseholds, if either mortgagor or mortgagee is able to obtain a renewal of the lease, the renewed lease is treated as engrafted on the old and as forming part of the mortgage security (s).

(o) Nor has a lessor any equity to compel a person between whom and himself there is no privity to take an assignment of the term or make himself liable on the covenants even though such person has taken possession (Moore v. Choat (1839), 8 Sim. 508; Moore v. Greg (1848), 2 Ph. 717).

M. & G. 629); nor does a declaration of trust prevent the trustee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor from disclaiming the nominal reversion (Re Maughan, Ex parte Monkhouse (1885), 14 Q. B. D. 956). SECT. 3.
Leaseholds.
Fixtures.

238. Mortgages of leaseholds, whether by assignment or sub-demise, are, so far as fixtures are concerned, on the same footing as freeholds (t). If a tenant who has put up fixtures, which as against the landlord he is entitled to remove, mortgages his leasehold interest, the assurance will pass those fixtures whether they are mentioned or not (u), and whether the assurance is a legal mortgage or by deposit of deeds (v), and whether the articles were affixed before or after the mortgage (u). But in the case of a mortgage of leaseholds by demise, the absolute property in the fixtures as separate chattels, with the right to remove and sell them, does not pass to the mortgagee unless an intention to that effect is apparent, but only the right to them during the demise (x).

SECT. 4.—Incorporeal Hereditaments.

Incorporeal
ments.

239. Incorporeal hereditaments, such as reversions, remainders, manors, advowsons, commons, tithe rentcharge and other rentcharges, annuities and other property of a like nature existing in gross and apart from the ownership of corporeal property, may be the subject of a legal mortgage which must be created by deed (y). Incorporeal hereditaments of a freehold nature are mortgaged in the same way as other freehold hereditaments (z).

Reversions and remainders.

240. Reversions and remainders, whether vested or contingent, may be the subject of a mortgage created by deed (a). Where the contingency makes the security a very speculative one, a policy of insurance to guard against the particular risk is frequently taken (b).

Manors.

241. A manor properly consists of demesne lands, jurisdiction in a court baron, and services of free tenants in fee liable to escheat and owing attendance at the court (c). The mortgage of a manor includes any copyholds of the manor subsequently purchased by and surrendered to the mortgagor (d).

Advowsons.

242. An advowson is a perpetual right of presentation to a church or an ecclesiastical benefice. An advowson is often appendant to a manor, and in such a case it passes by a conveyance of the manor (e). When it is severed and in gross it is mortgaged, like any other incorporeal hereditament, by an instrument under seal (f). Though the legal right to present to the church is vested in the mortgagee, he is a mere trustee for the mortgagor and must present the person nominated by the latter (g). An advowson is a very indifferent security, as it produces no profit and can only be made available by the exercise of the power of sale, and if sold during a vacancy, the purchaser does not acquire the right to present for that turn (h).

SECT. 4.
Incorporeal
Hereditaments.

243. A right of common in gross is a right of common possessed by one person over the lands belonging to another, not as appendant or appurtenant to any lands of his own, but as an independent subject of property (i). This is not a common form of property, and is seldom, if ever, met with as the subject of a mortgage. Rights of common in gross.

244. Tithe rentcharges in lay hands are real estate, and are mortgaged by assurances applicable to corporeal hereditaments (j). Tithe rentcharges.

245. Grants of rentcharges for an estate in fee simple are not uncommon in Lancashire and in some other parts of the country. Such rentcharges may be the subject of a mortgage in fee simple (k). Rentcharges.

246. Rates levied under different statutory powers may be the subject of a mortgage. But as the power to mortgage is purely statutory, it is necessary in every case to consult the statute under which the borrower is acting to see if the contemplated security is within the purview of the Act (l). Rates.

SECT. 5.—Personal Chattels.

247. A mortgage of personal chattels is called a bill of sale (m). Every bill of sale made or given in consideration of any sum under Personal chattels.

If given by way of security for the payment of money by the grantor thereof, it is void unless it is in accordance with the statutory form (o), and it must have a schedule annexed thereto or written thereon containing an inventory of the personal chattels therein comprised (p). Debentures issued by any mortgage, loan or other incorporated company, and secured upon the capital, stock or goods, chattels and effects of such company, are excluded from the operation of the statutory provisions (q) affecting bills of sale (r).

SECT. 6.—Policies of Insurance and Choses in Action.

Policies of life insurance.

248. Policies of insurance on the lives of persons are frequent subjects of mortgage (s) either alone or with other property. The policies may either be upon the life of the mortgagor or upon the life of another person. The validity of a policy depends upon the absence of misrepresentation at the time the policy was effected (t), the assured not having done any act forbidden by the policy which makes it void, and the person effecting the policy having an insurable interest in the life of the person insured (u).

for title.

249. There are no implied covenants (a) in the case of a mortgage of a policy of insurance, and the security must contain express covenants for whatever acts the mortgagee requires the mortgagor to perform or abstain from. The covenants by the mortgagor which are usually inserted are as follows (b): not to permit the policy to become void, and if it becomes void to effect a new policy in lieu thereof; and to pay the premiums and deliver receipts to the mortgagee. It is also usual to insert a provision that the mortgagee may keep the policy on foot in case the mortgagor neglects to do so, and that the moneys advanced for that purpose shall be a charge on the policy (c).

250. The mortgage does not require the insertion of a power of attorney to enable the mortgagee to sue for and recover the amount insured. But notice of the mortgage must be given to the insurance office, and the dates on which several notices are received will regulate the priority of all claims under different assignments (d). A second mortgagee with notice of a first mortgage does not, however, gain priority over the first mortgagee by giving the first notice to the insurance company (e).

251. The statutory power of sale conferred on mortgagees applies to mortgages executed since the 31st December, 1881, by deed of policies of insurance and other choses in action (f).

252. When a policy of insurance is taken out by the creditor as part of his security, and the premiums are paid by the debtor or charged against him in account, or if it is agreed or can be inferred from the bargain between the parties that the debtor has undertaken to pay the premiums, the policy, or the balance of the insurance money after discharge of the debt, belongs to the debtor (g). But if a mortgagee of an annuity or other property which depends upon a life insures the life of the mortgagor merely for his own protection, paying the premiums out of his own pocket, the policy belongs to the mortgagee (h); and the mere fact of the creditor having charged the premiums against the debtor without evidence that the debtor agreed to pay them does not give the debtor a right to the policy (i).

253. Debts and other legal choses in action and equitable interests in personalty may be the subject of mortgages (k).

Under this class of security falls a mortgage of an already existing mortgage, called a sub-mortgage (l). The security consists of—

(1) a personal covenant by the original mortgagee for payment of the principal sum advanced and interest;

(2) an assignment of the original mortgage debt and interest and the benefit of the power of sale (m), and all the other securities for the same;

(3) a conveyance of the mortgaged property (including in the case of leaseholds mortgaged by demise the benefit of the trust and provisions contained in the original mortgage of and concerning the nominal reversion thereby reserved), subject to such right of redemption as may be subsisting under the original mortgage; and

(4) a proviso for redemption on payment of the principal and interest secured by the sub-mortgage.

Before completing a sub-mortgage the lender should inquire from the original mortgagor as to the actual amount due on the mortgage, and should give him notice of his sub-mortgage.

On a mortgage of a debt, however secured, the mortgagee should be relieved from any obligation to sue for or require payment of the debt or any part of it, or to take any steps for that purpose, unless he shall think fit, and from any liability for loss occasioned by his omission to do so (n).

254. The legal title of a mortgagee to stocks and shares in a public company is given by a transfer in accordance with the requirements of the constitution of the corporation and duly registered in the name of the mortgagee (o). This is generally accompanied by an independent document setting forth the actual nature of the security (p). There is a common practice of executing a transfer of shares in blank, and, only when it becomes necessary to assert the title of the mortgagee, to insert his name and register the document. This may be good or bad according as the shares are required to be transferred by deed or not (g). A deed cannot be altered after it is once executed (r), and a blank transfer, unless it is re-executed and re-delivered after the name of the transferee has been inserted, does not pass the legal title to the stock or shares which require to be transferred by deed (s). Where the deed of transfer is invalid, registration of the transferee does not give him any title (t); nor does he acquire a legal title until all the conditions required by the articles have been fulfilled to give him, as between himself and the company, a present, absolute and unconditional right to have the transfer registered (u).

SECT. 7.—Ships, Cargo and Freight.

255. A mortgage of a British ship (v) is purely a statutory matter (a). The instrument creating the security must be in the form given in the statute and must be produced to the registrar of the ship's port of registry and recorded in the register book. Mortgages are registered in the order of time in which they are produced to the registrar (b) and rank in priority according to the order in which they are so recorded (c). The mortgage confers a power of sale (d).

Ships.

No notice of trust is allowed to be entered on the register (e), and a legal mortgage of a ship in statutory form and registered has priority over an equitable charge previously given, even where the legal mortgagee takes with notice of the equitable charge (f).

mortgages on ships.

A mortgage of a ship passes as incident thereto all articles necessary for the navigation of the ship or the prosecution of the adventure which were on board at the date of the mortgage or were brought on board in substitution for them subsequently to the mortgage (g).

SECT. 7.

Ships, Cargo and Freight.Power of mortgagor to charter.Mortgage of freight.

A mortgagor of a ship remaining in possession retains all the rights and powers of ownership, and his contracts with regard to the ship are valid and effectual provided his dealings do not materially impair the security of the mortgagee (h). But the mortgagee is not bound by a charterparty for the carriage at a high rate of contraband of war to belligerents (i).

256. Frequently a statutory mortgage of a ship is accompanied by an independent collateral mortgage by the statutory owner of the freight earnings and the policies of insurance on the ship. With regard to such interests, it is not necessary to comply with the statutory provisions to make a valid security (k).

Independently of contract, the mortgagee of a ship does not obtain any assignment of the freight, nor does the mortgagor undertake to employ the ship in any particular way or to employ the ship so as to earn freight at all. Until the mortgagee takes possession the mortgagor may allow the ship to lie tranquil in dock or employ it in any part of the world, not in earning freight, but for the purpose of bringing home goods of his own or for his own benefit or for another at a nominal freight (l); but when a mortgagee takes actual possession he becomes owner of the ship (m), and everything which represents the earnings of the ship which had not been paid before must be paid to the mortgagee as such owner, but this is limited to unpaid freight which the ship was in the course of earning when he took possession (n).

SECT. 8.—Stamps on Mortgages.

Legal mortgages etc.

(l) Keith v. Burrows (1877), 2 App. Cas. 636, 645.

(m) He is justified in taking possession, although there has been no actual default under the mortgage, if the mortgagor is working the ship in such a way as materially to impair the security (The Manor, [1907] P. 339, C. A.).

(n) Keith v. Burrows (1877), 2 App. Cas. 636, 646, 660; Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Wilson (1872), 7 Ch. App. 507, 511; Shillito v. Biggart, [1903] 1 K. B. 683, 687. Further, the first registered mortgagee of a ship, by taking possession of her before the freight is completely earned, obtains a legal right to receive the freight and to retain thereout not only what is due on his first mortgage, but also the amount of any subsequent charge which he may have acquired on the freight in priority to every equitable charge of which he had no notice, and it makes no difference that a subsequent incumbrancer was the first to give notice to the charterers of his charge on the freight (Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Wilson, supra); and see, further, title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION.

(p) "Mortgage" means a security by way of mortgage for the payment of any definite and certain sum of money (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 86 (1)). By virtue of this provision "mortgage" includes conditional surrenders by way of mortgage (see p. 125, ante), further charges (see p. 136, post), and any disposition by way of security of any property, real or personal; any conveyance on trust for sale by way of security (see p. 118, ante), except conveyances for the benefit of creditors generally (see Coates v. Perry (1821), 3 Brod. & Bing. 48), or for specified creditors accepting composition in full satisfaction of their debts, or exceeding five in number; any deed or writing qualifying any disposition of property apparently absolute but intended by way of security only; any agreement for a mortgage accompanied by a deposit of deeds and not chargeable as an equitable mortgage (see United Realization Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1899] 1 Q. B. 361); any deed operating as a mortgage of any stock or marketable security (see Gartsides (Brookside Brewery), Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1900), 82 L. T. 686; Kennedy v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1900), 65 J. P. 9). The definition is, however, not necessarily exhaustive (City of London Brewery Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1899] 1 Q. B. 121, 139, C. A.). Duty is not payable for interest in arrear unless capitalised (Barker v. Smark (1841), 7 M. & W. 590), or interest calculated from a past date (Pierpoint v. Gower (1842), 4 Man. & G. 795), or mortgagee's costs (Doe d. Scrutton v. Snaith (1832), 8 Bing. 146; Doe d. Mercer v. Bragg (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 620; Wroughton v. Turtle (1843), 11 M. & W. 561; Lysaght v. Warren (1846), 10 I. L. R. 269), or banker's commission (Frith v. Rotherham (1846), 15 M. & W. 39). A perpetual annuity granted in consideration of the payment of a sum of money is not necessarily a mortgage (Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1897] 2 Q. B. 316, C. A.); and see p. 88, ante; and title RENTCHARGES AND ANNUITIES.

(including a mortgage of an equity of redemption (q)), covenants (r) (except marketable securities otherwise chargeable (s)), and warrants of attorney to confess and enter up judgment (t), being the only (a) principal or primary (b) security (c) for the payment or repayment of money, and upon collateral, auxiliary (d), additional, or substituted (e) securities (other than equitable mortgages (f)), or

(l) An equitable mortgage for the purposes of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), is an agreement or memorandum under hand only, relating to the deposit of any title deeds or instruments constituting or being evidence of the title of any property whatsoever, other than stock or marketable security, or creating a charge on such property (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 86 (2)). A pledge of goods accompanied by delivery of documents of title to the goods is not an equitable mortgage (Harris v. Birch (1842), 9 M. & W. 591), even though a power of sale is thereby given (Re Attenborough and Inland Revenue Commissioners (1855), 11 Exch. 461). As to the characteristics of equitable mortgages generally, see pp. 74 et seq., ante. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue consider that instruments, though under hand only, by which the mortgagee acquires the powers and advantages of a legal mortgagee, e.g., a power of sale, should be stamped as a legal mortgage; compare United Realization Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1899] 1 Q. B. 361.

261. A conditional surrender or grant of copyhold or customary hereditaments alone by way of mortgage, or the memorandum thereof if made out of court, or the copy of court roll thereof if made in court, is chargeable with the same duty as a mortgage (r).

Copyholds.

Where other property, not of copyhold or customary tenure, is included as security for the same debt, the instrument relating to it is chargeable with duty as a mortgage on the full amount of the debt, and the surrender or memorandum thereof, or copy of court roll as the case may be, is chargeable with not more than 10s. (s).

262. Any security for the transfer or re-transfer of any stock, unless under hand only, is chargeable with the same duty as a mortgage for an amount equal to the value of the stock, and dealings therewith are chargeable as similar instruments dealing with a mortgage (t).

Stocks, shares etc.

Dispositions of all marketable securities upon mortgage under hand only are chargeable with a duty of 6d. (u).

Advances for the insurance of mortgaged property, or to keep up a life policy comprised in the security, or for renewing a grant or lease for lives upon the dropping of a life, are not reckoned as further advances for the purpose of calculating duty (ibid., s. 88 (3)).

(r) Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 87 (4). Where the surrender is preceded by a deed of covenant to surrender containing a covenant for payment, it is customary to stamp the deed of covenant as the principal security, and the subsequent surrender as a collateral security. Nature of equity of
redemption.

265. The right of a mortgagor to redeem his property upon payment of principal, interest and costs (i) is not a mere right, but an equitable estate or interest in the property mortgaged (j). A mortgagor is not after execution of a legal mortgage "seised" of the land according to the common law, and, therefore, is not liable to the burdens of tenure incident to customary freeholds, such as a heriot due to the lord of a manor on the death of a tenant seised of a tenement in the manor (Copestake v. Hoper, [1908] 2 Ch. 10, C. A.). For forms of mortgage of equity of redemption, and notices thereof, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., pp. 725, 728, 730, 901, 902; and see p. 76, ante.

goods are in the possession of the mortgagee (l). The right of redemption is incident to the contract of mortgage, and does not depend on the form of the transaction (m), and cannot be negatived by contemporaneous agreement or ever clogged (n).

SECT. 2.—Persons Entitled to Redeem.

266. The mortgagor and all persons having any interest in the property subject to the mortgage or liable to pay the mortgage debt can redeem (o). Persons who can redeem.

The mortgagor, until he has absolutely assigned his equity of redemption, can redeem the mortgaged property (p), and a mortgagor who has entirely parted with the equity of redemption nevertheless, upon being sued for payment of the mortgage debt by the mortgagee, acquires a new right to redeem (q). Mortgagor.

volunteers (r) ; subsequent incumbrancers (s) ; a tenant for years by a lease made subsequent to the mortgage which the mortgagee refuses to confirm (t) ; a surety on payment by himself or refusal by the principal debtor to discharge the mortgage debt, or if he has mortgaged his own estate as security for the debt (u) ; tenants

(p) It is immaterial to the mortgagee, so far as the mortgagor's right to redeem is concerned, whether the mortgagor's title is good or bad ; the mortgagee is not entitled to dispute it (Tasker v. Small (1837), 3 My. & Cr. 63, per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., at p. 70) ; and an assignee of a mortgage is in the same position as the mortgagee (Walker v. Jones (1866), L. R. 1 P. C. 50, 66). in common and joint tenants (a); a jointress (b); a dowress (c); a tenant by the curtesy (d); a tenant for life (e). Purchasers of the equity of redemption redeem according to the dates of their purchases (f).

An assignee pendente lite may make himself a party to an action of redemption by ex parte application (g) and continue the action, and if he does so he is bound by all the proceedings therein (h); but he is under no obligation to make himself a party (i).

267. When the equity of redemption has been settled, the owner of the first estate of inheritance and all intermediate life estates can redeem (k), but a remainderman cannot redeem a mortgage on the settled property without the consent of the tenant for life (l). If the equity of redemption has been assigned to the trustees of a settlement, they and not their cestuis que trust can redeem, in the absence of any direction by the court to the contrary (m).

268. Legatees whose legacies are charged on the mortgaged property can redeem to protect their legacies (n), but only through the personal representative (o). In the case of the death of the mortgagor since the 31st December, 1897, until the personal representative has conveyed to the heir by the common law, or the customary heir or devisee of the mortgagor, or, in the case of a devisee, assented to the devise, he can redeem mortgages on freeholds or personalty (p). The heir or devisee, after his interest has been so vested, can redeem mortgages on freeholds (q). As regards mortgages of copyholds, it would seem that the personal representative of a mortgagor who has died since the 31st December, 1897, can redeem, if the mortgagee has been admitted, because the equitable estate in copyholds of the deceased vests in him (r); but if the mortgagee has not been admitted the customary heir or devisee is the only person entitled to redeem (s). In the case of the mortgagor dying before the 1st January, 1898, the right to redeem freeholds or copyholds is vested in the heir (t), customary heir (a), or devisees (b), unless, as regards the claim of the heir, the mortgagor had during his life legally converted the equity of redemption in the land into personalty (c), or had mortgaged realty and personalty in one mortgage (d), and except in the last named events the legal personal representative could not redeem mortgages of real estate whether the mortgage was in fee (e) or for a term (f).

(o) He who has the legal estate must redeem, unless a special case is made, as that trustees or executors are colluding with the mortgagees, or if they are unsafe (Troughton v. Binkes (1801), 6 Ves. 573, 575).

270. A person who has contracted to purchase the equity of redemption, unless his rights under the contract are disputed (m), and a plaintiff in an action for the administration of the mortgagor's estate, who has obtained a decree for sale, can redeem (n).

271. Neither the mortgagor while bankrupt (o), nor his general creditors (p), can redeem property which he has mortgaged. His trustee in bankruptcy has, however, certain statutory powers to redeem such property (q), but he cannot, after a foreclosure order, claim to redeem the mortgaged property at the valuation put upon the security by the mortgagee in the bankruptcy proceedings, unless a special direction is inserted in the foreclosure order (r); nor can he redeem a secured creditor who does not prove (s).

272. If a mortgagor dies without an heir and intestate in respect of any real estate, the equity of redemption in mortgaged land escheats, and the lord taking it can redeem (t).

273. A person who has acquired a possessory title against the mortgagor under the Statutes of Limitation (a) can redeem (b). A stranger cannot redeem, but if a claimant has a prima facie title to an interest in the equity of redemption, a mortgagee who requires proof of such interest may lose his right to costs (c).

agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee contained in the mortgage can make a mortgage irredeemable (f); and no contract between a mortgagor and mortgagee made at the time of the mortgage, and as part of the mortgage transaction, or, in other words, as one of the terms of the loan, can be valid if it provides that the mortgaged property shall become the absolute property of the mortgagee upon any event whatsoever (g). Redemption may, however, be postponed for a reasonable time where there is a corresponding provision for the continuance of the loan, and there do not exist any circumstances which make the clause unreasonable or oppressive (h).

SECT. 3.
Restrictions on Right to Redeem.

275. It is not possible in a mortgage contract to give to the mortgagee a collateral benefit outside the mortgage contract and continuing after redemption (i), nor to impose any burden or restriction upon a mortgagor after he has paid the principal, interest, and costs due under the mortgage (k). Such a contract limited to benefits.

(f) Courtenay v. Wright (1860), 2 Giff. 337. This rule does not apply to debentures issued by a limited company (Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), s. 103); see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 362.

Jarrah Timber and Wood Paving Corporation*, [1904] A. C. 323. It seems doubtful whether the rule against clogging the equity of redemption has any application to debentures issued by a company (De Beers Consolidated Mines, Ltd. v. British South Africa Co., [1912] A. C. 52).

(h) Teevan v. Smith (1882), 20 Ch. D. 724, C. A.; Re Hone's Estate (1873), 8 I. R. Eq. 65; Biggs v. Hoddinott, Hoddinott v. Biggs, [1898] 2 Ch. 307; see p. 71, ante. The following periods have been held to be unreasonable: thirty years (Talbot v. Braddill (1683), 1 Vern. 183); twenty years (Cowdry v. Day (1859), 1 Giff. 316); twenty-eight years (Morgan v. Jeffreys, [1910] 1 Ch. 620); the life of the mortgagor (Price v. Perrie (1702), Freem. (CH.) 258; Salt v. Northampton (Marquess), [1892] A. C. 1); unless the mortgagor intended a kindness or benefit to the mortgagee (Bonham v. Newcomb (1684), 1 Vern. 232); and see p. 122, ante. A restriction of redemption to the heirs male of the body of the mortgagor does not prevent the mortgagor from redeeming (Howard v. Harris (1682), 1 Vern. 33).

(i) For instance, a contract to sell, if required, to the mortgagee, part of the mortgaged property at a fixed price (Jennings v. Ward (1705), 2 Vern. 520; Re Edwards' Estate, supra), or an option contained in the mortgage deed to the mortgagee to purchase at a fixed price (Samuel v. Jarrah Timber and Wood Paving Corporation, supra), is invalid. It has been suggested that an option of purchase, in the contract of mortgage, giving the mortgagee the refusal of the property without fixing the price, might be upheld.

(k) Contracts to buy beer from a brewer-mortgagee (Noakes & Co., Ltd. v. Rice, [1902] A. C. 24); to pay to the mortgagee a share of the profits of an hotel (Saniley v. Wilde, [1899] 2 Ch. 474, C. A.); to employ the mortgagee as auctioneer (Broad v. Selfe (1863), 11 W. R. 1036; Browne v. Ryan, [1901] 2 I. R. 653, C. A.), or as a broker (Bradley v. Carritt, [1903] A. C. 253), are not enforceable after redemption. A covenant in a mortgage deed allowing pre-emption was rejected where the mortgagee had concealed it (Orby v. Trigg (1722), 9 Mod. Rep. 2). On a sale, where part of the purchase-money remains on mortgage, a covenant for pre-emption is good, if it is part of the contract of sale, and not part of the contract of mortgage (Davies v. Chamberlain (1909), 26 T. L. R. 138, C. A.). In spite

the continuance of the mortgage is, however, good (l), and a restrictive covenant not so limited may bind the mortgagor during the continuance of the mortgage, but after redemption it is no longer binding (m).

276. But the rule against clogging the equity of redemption does not invalidate subsequent and independent transactions between the mortgagor and mortgagee relating to the mortgaged property. Thus the mortgagee may, subsequently to the mortgage, stipulate for an option of purchase of the property (n), or for a sale (o) or release (p) to him of the equity of redemption (o). Such a sale or release is, however, liable to be set aside if there has been any oppression or unfairness on the part of the mortgagee (q); but mere inadequacy of price is not in itself ground for setting it aside (r). Moreover, a contract contemporaneous with a mortgage, but wholly independent of it and forming no part of the consideration for the mortgage, is valid (s).

As regards leases by a mortgagor to his mortgagee, a lease for a long period at an inadequate rent will not be upheld (t), but an ordinary occupation lease at a fair rent is not objectionable (a).

Bonus.

277. As a general rule, any device by which a mortgage is made to pay on redemption more than principal, interest and costs is void (b), but a contract for payment to the mortgagee of a bonus in addition to the sum advanced is valid if the bonus is reasonable and the contract was freely entered into by the mortgagee (c).

of a sale from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, redemption has been allowed on special grounds (Bowen v. Edwards (1661), 1 Rep. Ch. 117, [221]). As to an option to call for shares in consideration of a loan, see London and Globe Finance Corporation v. Montgomery (1902), 18 T. L. R. 661.

A valid bonus can be claimed by a mortgagee either in taking account of what is due on his mortgage or under the head of just allowances (Bucknell v. Vickery (1891), 64 L. T. 701, P. C.); and see p. 224, post.

Instances of loans with a bonus are debentures issued at a discount, and loans by building societies where a premium is charged (d).

A solicitor-mortgagee can charge his costs for all work done in completing and preparing a mortgage, and no such mortgage can be redeemed except upon payment of such charges and remuneration (e).

278. Although no contract between mortgagee and mortgagor can make a mortgage irredeemable, the circumstances of the case may make redemption, for a time, impossible; as, for example, when a mortgage is made to secure an annuity, or as an indemnity against future liabilities, or for any other object not capable of immediate pecuniary valuation (f).

279. The terms on which a mortgagor or those claiming under him are entitled to redeem are the same, whether they are ascertained in an action for redemption or for foreclosure (g), except as regards the right of the mortgagee to recover arrears of interest barred by lapse of time (h). These terms are payment to the mortgagee of the principal debt, interest thereon, all proper costs, charges, and expenses incurred by the mortgagee in relation to the mortgage debt or the mortgage security, the costs of litigation properly undertaken by the mortgagee in reference to the mortgage debt or the mortgage security, and the mortgagee's costs of the redemption action (i). However small may be the interest in the mortgaged property of the person seeking redemption, he must pay to the mortgagee all that is due (k).

A mortgagor beneficially entitled to possession of property for a long term of years capable of enlargement can enlarge the term into a fee simple, notwithstanding the incumbrances on the term which upon enlargement affect the fee simple so created (q). But a co-owner who has mortgaged his share to another co-owner cannot enforce partition of the mortgaged property without the consent of the mortgagee (r).

281. On the death of the mortgagor intestate the equity of redemption in his mortgaged property descends and devolves in the same manner (s) and is subject to the same incidents of dower (t), curtesy (t), and escheat (u) as any other equitable estate.

The interest of a judgment debtor in an equity of redemption in either freehold (a) or leasehold (b) land cannot be taken in execution under a writ of elegit at the suit of a subject, but it may be reached by the appointment of a receiver (c). Every judgment creditor to whom the land of his mortgagor has been actually delivered in execution by registration of the order appointing a receiver has an interest in the equity of redemption (d); he can redeem prior incumbrancers, and is a necessary party to foreclosure and redemption (e). He may also obtain by summons an order for the sale of his debtor's interest in such land (f).

283. A mortgagor is not entitled to redeem the mortgaged property before the day fixed in the mortgage contract for payment of the principal (h), unless the mortgagee has taken steps to recover payment by taking possession of the property or otherwise (i). On that day the mortgagor has a legal right, on payment of what is due, to recover the mortgaged property (k). After that day has passed and default has been made, he has an equitable right to redeem the property, although by reason of the condition for payment having been broken the mortgagee's estate has become absolute at law (l).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Conditions of Redemption.

284. It is a settled rule of practice that after default has been made by a mortgagor in payment of the principal and interest in accordance with the proviso for redemption, he must either give the mortgagee six calendar months' notice of his intention to pay off the mortgage, or pay him six months' interest in lieu of notice (m); and it seems that if the mortgagor, after giving notice of his intention to pay off the mortgage, makes default in so doing the mortgagee is entitled to a fresh six months' notice or six months' interest in lieu of notice (n). The latter case is not an authority for the proposition that the same rule applies if the notice to pay off has been given by the mortgagee (Edmondson v. Copland, [1911] 2 Ch. 301, 308). Mere delay in drawing up an order directing payment out of a fund in court to a mortgagee is not a ground for demanding a further notice or interest in lieu of notice (Sharpnell v. Blake (1737), 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 603; Harmer v. Priestley (1853), 16 Beav. 569).

property (o), nor the fact that the property has been realised otherwise than by the act of the mortgagee (p), gives rise to any exception from these rules.

If, however, the mortgagee himself demands payment or takes steps to realise his security (q), whether the time fixed by the mortgage deed for redemption has arrived or not (r), or consents to a sale of the mortgaged property in an administration action (s), or to payment of his debt out of a fund in court (t), he is not entitled to the usual six months' notice or interest, even though after he has taken proceedings to recover his debt the mortgagor has given him notice of intention to pay in six months (u): nor can a mortgagee who has demanded payment refuse a tender of principal and interest to date of payment, though the time limited in the mortgagee's demand has been exceeded (a). But where a day for redemption has been fixed by a foreclosure order, the mortgagor, if he wishes to redeem before that day, must pay interest up to the day appointed (b).

The mortgagee is not entitled to notice, or interest in lieu of notice, if his loan is merely of a temporary character, as, for instance, in the case of an equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds (c).

Nature of tender.

285. A mortgagor who desires to discharge the mortgage debt must tender to the mortgagee the full amount that is due in legal currency (d) and produce the same before the mortgagee unless he waives the production (e) or refuses to accept money then available for immediate payment (f). The tender must be unconditional, but may be under protest (g).

Unless a place for payment is named in the mortgage deed, the tender must be made to the mortgagee or to some person entitled on his behalf to receive all that is due under the mortgage (h). Where more than one person is entitled to the money a tender is good which is, after full notice to all parties, made at the office of one of them who is a solicitor (i).

A stranger cannot make a valid tender; it must be made by a person having a prima facie right to redeem (k).

A mortgagee may lose his right to receive costs or be ordered to pay the costs if, by refusal of a proper tender, he renders necessary an action of redemption (l), or after a sufficient tender commences an action of foreclosure (m). Refusal of a proper tender is not equal to payment, but if the money, after the refusal, has been paid into court or kept ready for immediate payment to the mortgagee, no further interest is payable (n). If it is intended that on receipt of the money the mortgagee should execute a reconveyance, a draft of the proposed deed should be sent to him at a reasonable time before the tender (o). Money extorted by a mortgagee in excess of what is due can be recovered by the mortgagor as money had to his use (p).

redemption action (r), but the court will not stop redemption on account of the absence of a party who cannot be found if the mortgagee runs no risk (a), and the court can protect the rights of the absent party by preserving them in the decree (b). The rule requiring the presence of all parties is based on the right of the mortgagee to account once for all, which can only be done if the account is taken in the presence of all parties who could demand an account (c).

The mortgagee after assignment and intermediate assignees are not necessary parties unless they have been in possession, and the mortgagor, alleging receipts in excess of the debt, claims personal repayment (d).

Sub-mortgagee.

287. When a mortgage has been sub-mortgaged, both the original mortgagee and the sub-mortgagee are necessary parties in an action of redemption by the original mortgagor (e), but the original mortgagee may redeem the sub-mortgagee without making the original mortgagor a party. If numerous assignments upon trust have been made by the mortgagee, it is sufficient if the persons having the legal estate are parties. In the case of a strict settlement of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee, the first tenant in tail and those having intermediate estates for life are necessary parties (f).

Personal representatives.

In the case of the death of a mortgagee of freehold lands, his personal representatives are necessary parties (g).

Copyholds.

In the case of copyholds, which do not vest in the personal representatives of the mortgagee (h), and where the mortgaged property and mortgage debt are not in the same hands, it is necessary to join as parties the person who can reconvey the mortgaged property and the person who can give a discharge for the mortgage debt (i).

In the case of successive mortgages a puisne mortgagee must make all mortgagees subsequent to himself, as well as the mortgagor, parties in an action to redeem a prior mortgagee (n), and if he seeks to redeem any other mortgagee than the one immediately prior to himself he must make parties all mortgagees between himself and the mortgagee whom he seeks to redeem (o); but he need not make a mortgagee prior to such mortgagee a party unless the amount due cannot be ascertained in his absence. As between himself and all behind him, a puisne mortgagee has a prior right to redeem a prior mortgagee (p).

290. Any mortgagor, whether legal or equitable, or any person having the right to redeem any mortgage, whether legal or equitable, may take out as of course an originating summons, returnable in the chambers of a judge of the Chancery Division, for redemption, reconveyance, and delivery of possession by the mortgagee (r). A summons cannot, it seems, be issued for possession only (s). The action can be commenced by writ, but at the plaintiff's risk of being allowed only the costs of an originating summons (t).

(iii.) Pleadings.

291. The plaintiff must set forth in his statement of claim, or in an affidavit in support of the summons, the mortgage contract and all the material facts, showing how he derives his right to redeem if he is not the original mortgagor. He should also state shortly any special circumstances, such as that the defendant mortgagee has been in possession. The mortgagee can deny the plaintiff's right to redeem (u), or any of the allegations in the statement of claim or affidavit (a).

Every action against a mortgagee by the owner of the equity of redemption who admits the mortgage must expressly or by implication contain an offer to redeem (b), except in the following cases, namely, when a person entitled to redeem asks for a sale of the mortgaged property instead of redemption (c), when the question raised is one merely of construction arising under the mortgage deed (d), or when the mortgagee has become a party to trusts affecting the equity of redemption, in which case any person interested in those trusts may enforce their due performance without offering to redeem (e).

A mortgagor who does not admit the mortgage, and has failed in an action, containing no prayer for redemption, brought to impeach the mortgage, will not be allowed in that action to redeem a (1887), unreported. The practice is otherwise in Ireland, where, however, the rule corresponding to R. S. C., Ord. 55, r. 5A, is slightly different (Bank of Ireland v. Slattery, [1911] 1 I. R. 33).

(t) Johnson v. Evans (1889), 60 L. T. 29. No appeal by a mortgagor as to costs can be brought except by leave of the judge (Charles v. Jones (1886), 33 Ch. D. 80, C. A.). A writ instead of an originating summons is justifiable when the decision does not depend solely on the construction of the documents, but there are disputed facts of such complexity that they cannot be conveniently adjudicated upon unless they are brought before the court in a statement of claim. It would seem that questions of priorities among mortgagees cannot be decided on an originating summons (Re Giles, Real and Personal Advance Co. v. Michell (1890), 43 Ch. D. 391, C. A.).

(u) This denial, if unfounded, may be a ground for depriving the mortgagee of his costs (Incorporated Society v. Richards (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 258, 334). As to pleading generally, see title PLEADING.

Bowyer* (1858), 2 De G. & J. 421, 446, C. A.).

(c) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 25. Under the old practice an offer to redeem had to be pleaded expressly or in substance; but if the pleadings made a case for redemption the court would give leave to amend (Palk v. Clinton (Lord) (1805), 12 Ves. 48), and would require the mortgagor to undertake to redeem (Balfe v. Lord (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 480).

mortgagee who has relied wholly on his title as mortgagee, but must commence a new action for redemption (f). He may, however, redeem in the same action if the mortgagee has not relied solely on his title as mortgagee, but has claimed that he has become absolute owner (g).

292. In an action for redemption discovery can be enforced of the amount claimed to be due (h), of the mortgagee's securities (i), and of the names of incumbrancers (j). So long as his right to redeem subsists, a mortgagor, if the mortgage was made since the 31st December, 1881, is entitled at his own cost to inspect and take copies or abstracts of or extracts from the documents of title in the mortgagee's custody or power relating to the mortgaged property (k).

(v.) Order for Redemption or Sale.

293. The common form order for redemption directs an account of what is due to the mortgagee under the mortgage, and for his taxed costs of the redemption action, and directs a reconveyance (l) of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor, free from all incumbrances done by the mortgagee or persons claiming under him, and delivery up of the title deeds, upon the mortgagor paying to the mortgagee the amount certified to be due within six months (m) after the date of the master's certificate, at a time and place to be appointed by such certificate (n); and it further directs that if the mortgagor makes default in such payment his action is to stand dismissed with costs (o). For the liability of the mortgagee to produce title deeds, see p. 206, post.

as against the mortgagee an account of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property on the footing of wilful default (p); and if the mortgagor alleges that nothing is due on the mortgage, a direction is added for reconveyance within twenty-one days after the date of the certificate, if on taking the accounts it appears that nothing is in fact due (q).

Special directions are sometimes added as to improvements or substantial repairs by the mortgagee (r); but sums expended in necessary repairs, and any sums properly included under the mortgage contract, are allowed as "just allowances" without special direction (s). Special directions may also be added to charge the mortgagee with wilful neglect in allowing the mortgaged property to deteriorate (t), or for improper management (a), waste (b), or improper sale (c), or to bring out any special circumstance, such as a valuation of the security in the mortgagor's bankruptcy (d), and accounts may be directed to be taken with rests (e). If the order for redemption is made after tender, the account is directed of what was due on the date of such tender, with consequential directions to meet the alternative results of the amount due exceeding or not exceeding the amount tendered (f).

Successive
brancers.

294. Where there are successive incumbrancers, the order directs redemption by them according to their priorities, a puisne mortgagee on redeeming the prior mortgagees being given the right to foreclose subsequent mortgagees and the mortgagor unless they in their turn redeem him (g). The order may declare the priorities of the various incumbrancers (h), or direct an inquiry as to priorities (i). If the action is brought by a puisne mortgagee to redeem the first mortgagee and he fails to redeem, the action will be dismissed with costs as against both the first mortgagee and the mortgagor (k), but a puisne mortgagee of two properties, separately mortgaged to different prior incumbrancers, is entitled on redeeming the prior incumbrance on one property to foreclose the mortgagor as regards such property, although the prior incumbrance on the other property remains unredeemed (l).

295. As a rule, failure by a mortgagor to pay the amount certified due to the mortgagee within the time fixed by the order for redemption involves the dismissal of the action (m), unless the court for good cause (n) extends the time. The court will not readily extend the time in a redemption action (o), but it will do so in a case of bonâ fide mistake (p).

296. Dismissal for any cause, except want of prosecution (q), of an action for the redemption of a legal mortgage, is equivalent to a final order of foreclosure against the plaintiff (r), and in the case of successive mortgages, if the mortgagor is the plaintiff, the effect of excluding his interest is that the last of the incumbrancers becomes quasi-mortgagor, the prior mortgagees ranking according to their priorities (s). Such dismissal forecloses not only the mortgagor and his heirs, but also a person who has purchased the equity of redemption after the date of the writ or summons if the action has been duly registered as a lis pendens (t); but the trustee in bankruptcy of a mortgagor who becomes bankrupt after the writ or summons is not foreclosed unless he has been made a party to the action (a).

Dismissal of an action for redemption of an equitable mortgage by deposit of deeds does not pass the legal estate to the mortgagee (b).

297. Instead of making an order for redemption the court has power in an action for redemption or sale, or redemption alone or sale alone, to make an order for sale of the mortgaged property (c),

Costs.

298. In an action of redemption the mortgagor, as a rule, pays his own costs. The right of the mortgagee is to add all costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in relation to the mortgaged property to his mortgage debt (h).

SECT. 8.—Loss of Right to Redeem.

By sale of equity of
redemption.

299. The right of redemption is lost on a sale or release of the equity of redemption by the mortgagor to the mortgagee made by a separate transaction subsequent to the mortgage and entirely independent of any bargain contemporaneous with it (i), or by a valid sale of the property by the mortgagee under his power of sale (j).

By lapse of time.

The right of redemption may also be lost by lapse of time (k), or by the operation of an order for foreclosure (l).

By concealment of prior mortgage.

A mortgagor who, having mortgaged his lands, grants a subsequent mortgage thereof without giving the subsequent mortgagee notice in writing of the prior incumbrance, is deprived by statute of all equity of redemption in respect of the subsequent mortgage (m); but he can redeem at the time fixed in the mortgage (n). While rightfully in possession the mortgagor can; so far as is consistent with the mortgagee's rights (k), cut and sell the crops and underwood in the ordinary course of management (l), remove tenants' fixtures (m), nominate to livings (a), hold the title deeds against everyone except the mortgagee (b), and vote at parliamentary elections in respect of the mortgaged land (c).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Position as Tenant.

Position of mortgagor as tenant.

301. A mortgagor who remains in possession of the mortgaged property by permission of the mortgagee, without express provision (d), is a tenant to the mortgagee, but his tenancy differs in some material respects from any other tenancy. He has not the rights of a tenant at will (e), and he may be turned out of possession without notice, and is not entitled to emblements. His tenancy is only quodam modo a tenancy at will (f). The mortgagee may treat

The right of the mortgagee to restrain the felling of timber on a property which is an insufficient security is unaffected by the fact that the timber ought in a prudent course of management to be cut (Harper v. Aplin (1886), 54 L. T. 383). It seems that a mortgagee might restrain the removal of fixtures if such removal rendered the security insufficient (Ellis v. Glover and Hobson, Ltd., [1908] 1 K. by and can take advantage of the covenants, rights, and liabilities contained in such lease (d).

The mortgage does not release the lessees from their liability to the mortgagor, who can sue for such rent if no notice of intention to take possession or enter into receipt of the rents and profits of the mortgaged land has been given by the mortgagee (e); but possession by the mortgagee, or a notice by a mortgagee to a tenant under a lease created before the mortgage to pay the rent to him, deprives the mortgagor of the right to recover from the tenant, by distress or action, any rent accruing due since the mortgage (f).

A mortgage does not without express words entitle the mortgagee to receive rent in arrear at the date of the mortgage (g), or to sue for breaches of covenant committed prior to the mortgage (h), unless he became entitled to the rent after the 31st December, 1911 (i).

A tenancy at will is determined by a mortgage of which the tenant has notice, but the creation of a new tenancy may be inferred from the circumstances (j).

306. In the case of leases made before the creation of the mortgage, but after the 31st December, 1881, a mortgagor entitled to the possession (k) or receipt of the rent and profits of any land, as to which no notice of his intention to take possession or to enter into the receipt of the rents and profits has been given by the mortgagee, can sue the lessee for possession or recovery of rent, or for damages for any wrong or breach of covenant, and can, subject to certain

307. A joint lease by mortgagor and mortgagee is the only method of leasing lands mortgaged before the 1st January, 1882, unless express powers of leasing are contained in the mortgage deed. The lease in such case is made by the mortgagee who has the legal estate, and the mortgagor merely confirms it, inasmuch as being a stranger in law to the mortgaged property he can make no legal demise, and no covenant can be implied from him (p). A condition of re-entry reserved to the mortgagor and the mortgagee, or either of them, gives a right of re-entry to the mortgagee while his estate lasts, and to the mortgagor when the mortgage is paid off (q). If the rent is payable at one time to the mortgagee and at another to the mortgagor, a covenant by the lessee with both for payment of rent can be sued upon by the one then entitled to the rent (a).

If the lease was granted after the 31st December, 1881, the covenants, even though made with the mortgagor alone, can be enforced by the mortgagee in possession (b).

If the mortgagee agrees to grant a lease with the concurrence of Express powers of leasing must be inserted in a mortgage if it is desired that the mortgagor should have powers of granting mining leases, or of granting building and agricultural or occupation leases, apart from the statutory provisions (d). If the lease is made in accordance with the power, the benefit and apparently the burden of the covenants are annexed to the reversion, and so are available by or against the mortgagee, although the covenants are in form between the mortgagor as lessor and the lessee (e).

309. Statutory powers of leasing are given (f) to mortgagees and mortgagors if in possession (g) in the case of mortgages made after the 31st December, 1881, but these powers may be extended, by agreement in writing, to mortgages made before that date. The mortgagor or the mortgagee, when respectively in possession, can, subject to the statutory restrictions and unless the statutory power is excluded by the mortgage (h), grant leases of any land of any tenure which is in mortgage. years, and building (j) leases for any term not exceeding ninety-nine years. Every such lease must be made to take effect in possession not later than twelve months after its date, and must reserve the best rent that can reasonably be obtained, regard being had to the circumstances of the case, but without any fine being taken. It must contain a covenant by the lessee for payment of such rent, and a condition of re-entry if the rent is not paid within a period to be specified in the lease, not exceeding thirty days (k).

Rent.

In the case of a building lease a nominal or other rent less than the rent ultimately payable may be made payable for the first five years, or any less part of the term (l). The adequacy of the rent reserved must be judged by the particular circumstances. A lessor is justified in taking a rent from a good tenant substantially less than that offered by an inferior tenant. The court will not, unless it is satisfied that the inadequacy is substantial, interfere with a rent which is the result of a bonâ fide bargain between the mortgagor and the lessee (m), but it seems that the mortgagor cannot accept a lump sum as rent for future years (n).

Counterpart.

If the lease is made by the mortgagor he must, within one month after making the lease, deliver to the mortgagee a counterpart of the lease duly signed by the lessee, but the lessee is not concerned to see that this provision is complied with (o).

Effect on
rights.

The statutory power enables the mortgagor to create a term out of the estate of the mortgagee so as to convert that estate into one expectant on the term granted by the lease (p). The mortgagee is bound by a lease thus made by the mortgagor (q), and on giving notice to the lessee to pay the rent to him, and on default by the lessee, he can sue for it and bring an action for breach of any covenant contained in the lease, and these rights of the mortgagee are not affected by a collateral agreement between the mortgagor and the lessee after the date of the mortgage (r).

lessee can, however, protect himself from eviction (t) by the mortgagee by redeeming the mortgage (u). The reversion by estoppel in the lessor passes by assignment, so that an assignee of the equity of redemption can enforce the lessee's covenants (v).

A tenant under a lease granted ultra vires is, until eviction, actual or constructive, by paramount title, estopped from denying the mortgagor's title, and therefore is bound to pay the rent to the mortgagor, but payment of the rent to a mortgagee who demands it, and threatens eviction in case of refusal, is a good payment against the mortgagor or his assignee both in respect of rent accruing due after the demand, and of rent which accrued due before the demand but was then unpaid (a).

A lessee under such a lease can claim damages against the mortgagor for eviction, but cannot obtain a decree that the mortgagor should pay off the mortgage and so acquire the legal estate and be able to give effect to the contract (b).

311. A mortgagee who has recognised the tenant as his tenant cannot treat him as a trespasser and evict him (c). No privity can be assumed between the tenant and the mortgagee, but evidence is

A mortgagor cannot repudiate his own lease by paying off the mortgage and enforcing the rights which the mortgagee had; and see, further, title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., p. 128. A mortgagee is not bound because on being informed of a proposed tenancy he does not object (Re O'Rourke's Estate (1889), 23 L. R. Ir. 497). But a mortgagee who purchases the equity of redemption may be bound by tenancy agreements made by the mortgagor (Smith v. Phillips (1887), 1 Keen, 694; O'Loughlin v. Fitzgerald (1873), 7 I. R. Eq. 483).

(v) Cuthbertson v. Irving (1860), 6 H. & N. 135, Ex. Ch. Two exceptions have been stated to the above rule that a reversion by estoppel passes by assignment, namely, (1) in the case of a mortgage of copyhold land when the mortgagee has not been admitted (Doe d. North v. Webber (1837), 3 Bing. (N. C.) 922; Rayson v. Adcock (1863), 9 Jur. (N. S.) 800; and (2) when the want of title appears on the face of the lease (Pargeter v. Harris (1845), 7 Q. B. 708; Saunders v. Merryweather (1865), 3 H. & C. 902); but these latter cases, it has been said, must be taken to be overruled on this point by the case of Jolly v. Arbuthnot (1859), 4 De G. & J. 224; see Morton v. Woods (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 293, Ex. Ch., per KELLY, C.B., at p. 303; and see title ESTOPPEL, Vol. XIII., p. 367.

Recognition is a question of fact. Receipt of money from a tenant is not conclusive, for it may have been received by the mortgagee as part of the principal, or as interest. An encouragement by the mortgagee to the tenant to spend money may be evidence of a recognition of the lease (Doe d. Parry v. Hughes (1847), 11 Jur. 698; Doe d. Rogers v. Cadwallader (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 473; Evans v. Elliot (1838), admissible to prove that the mortgagor in granting the lease acted as agent for the mortgagee (d). The mortgagee and tenant can agree to have as between themselves the relationship of landlord and tenant (e). Such an agreement destroys the old lease between the mortgagor and tenant (f) and creates a tenancy between mortgagee and tenant, which, except under very special circumstances, would be a yearly one (g). The terms of such tenancy are ascertained by evidence and inference from the facts (h), and are not necessarily those on which the tenant held under the mortgagor (i). A mortgagee cannot, however, by notice to a tenant compel him to be his tenant, and the continuance in possession after notice from the mortgagee is no evidence of an agreement that he would become tenant (j).

(a) This expression does not include an incumbrancer deriving title in possession, has power, in like manner as if the legal estate were vested in him, and as against every incumbrancer, to accept such surrender of the whole or any part of the land comprised in the lease (b), and on a surrender of part of the land the rent may be apportioned (c) and the original lease may be varied if the lease so varied would have been an authorised lease by the person accepting the surrender (d). A mortgagee in possession (e) has, as against prior incumbrancers and the mortgagor, similar powers (f). But these powers do not authorise surrenders for any consideration except an agreement to accept an authorised lease (g).

Such a surrender is invalid unless,

(1) an authorised lease is granted of the whole of the land or mines and minerals comprised in the surrender to take effect in possession or within one month after the date of the surrender (h);

(2) the term certain or interest granted by the new lease is not less than the unexpired term or interest which would have been subsisting under the old lease if it had not been surrendered (i); and

(3) if the whole of the land, mines, and minerals originally leased has been surrendered, the rent reserved by the new lease is not less than the rent under the original lease, or if part only has been surrendered, the aggregate rents remaining payable or reserved under the original and the new lease are not less than the rent which would have been payable if there had been no surrender (k).

A contract to make or accept an authorised surrender may be enforced by or against every person on whom the surrender, if completed, would be binding (l).

The statutory powers do not authorise a surrender which could not have been accepted by the mortgagor and all the incumbrancers prior to the 1st January, 1912 (m), but the mortgage deed may confer further powers of accepting surrenders (n), and the mortgagor and mortgagees may by agreement in writing make the statutory powers applicable to mortgages executed before the 1st January, 1912 (o). On the other hand, the statutory powers may be excluded by the mortgagee and mortgagor in the mortgage deed or otherwise in writing (p). The statutory powers of accepting

A mortgagor as owner of the property, subject only to the right of the mortgagee, can, while in possession, bring an action to restrain any injury to the mortgaged property, and can recover damages for the same. 314. Where a mortgage is made by conveyance, the mortgagee takes the estate or interest of the mortgagor to the extent to which the conveyance is effectual to pass it (a); and if the conveyance is so framed as, either expressly or by statute (a), to convey the whole of the mortgagor's estate and interest, every estate, whether legal or equitable, which is vested in him passes to the mortgagee (b), and is held by him, subject only to the mortgagor's legal right of redemption, until the day fixed for payment, and thereafter subject to his equity of redemption (c).

Carter*, supra; and see Ex parte Marshall (1839), 9 Sim. 555. Where, in a mortgage of settled estates, the premises are by the operative part assured subject to a power to appoint a sum of money as portions, the scope of the conveyance is not enlarged by a covenant for quiet enjoyment free from portions (Notidge v. Dering, Raban v. Dering, [1910] 1 Ch. 297, C. A.; compare Nightingale v. Reynolds, [1903] 2 Ch. 236). As to the effect of a conveyance by way of mortgage by one of several joint tenants, see p. 91, ante.

(c) See pp. 71, 74, 147, ante.

The mortgagee has the rights and is subject to the liabilities which are incident to the estate thus vested in him; hence, if he has acquired a legal estate in the premises, he has, in general, all the rights of a legal owner, both as against the mortgagor and as against third parties (d), and he is subject to the liabilities which fall on a legal owner (e). If he has acquired an equitable estate only he has not the rights of a legal owner, and he loses the protection frequently afforded by the possession of the legal estate (f); but he does not incur the liabilities of a legal owner (g).

Where mortgage made by charge.

SECT. 2.—Assignment and Devolution.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Transfer of Mortgage.

316. The mortgagee is entitled to transfer his mortgage, and he may do this either absolutely or by way of sub-mortgage (k). But Mortgagee's right to transfer.

(d) But as long as the mortgagor is in possession he has now, by statute, the rights of action for certain purposes of a legal owner; see pp. 161, 163, 166, ante.

(e) Thus, in the case of freehold lands his estate is subject to the legal incidents of tenure (see, generally, title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL), and the mortgagor is freed from such incidents, save where, as in the case of dower and escheat, the strict rule has been varied by statute (see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 95, 96). And the mortgagee is personally liable for a rentcharge payable out of the land (Cundiff v. Fitzsimmons, [1911] 1 K. B. 513). In the case of leaseholds the mortgagee is subject as an assignee to the liability of the lessee under the covenants of the lease (see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 589; Galbraith v. Cooper (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 315, 326); the liability is usually avoided by taking the mortgage by way of subdemise (see pp. 126, 127, ante), whereby the mortgagor ceases to be liable (see Re Gee, Ex parte Official Receiver (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 65). A mortgagee by subdemise from an assignee of leasehold premises escapes liability to indemnify the lessee against the rent and covenants (Bonner v. Tottenham and Edmonton Permanent Investment Building Society, [1899] 1 Q. B. 161, C. A.; see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 407). In the case of a mortgage of shares by actual transfer, the mortgagee assumes the liabilities of the shareholder (see p. 132, ante; title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 197); and, unless the mortgagor asserts his right of redemption, he is under no liability to indemnify the mortgagee against these liabilities (Phené v. Gillan (1845), 5 Hare, 1).

(f) See pp. 327 et seq., post; and see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 81.

(g) As to leaseholds, see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 589. The fact that the equitable mortgagee has gone into possession and paid rent does not entitle the lessor to require him to take a legal assignment (Moore v. Greg (1848), 2 Ph. 717). As to the position of an equitable mortgagee of shares, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 197.

(h) Whether by writing or by deposit of deeds with or without writing; see pp. 78, 83, ante.

(i) See p. 83, ante; and see p. 272, post.

(k) Re Tahiti Cotton Co., Ex parte Sargent (1874), L. R. 17 Eq. 273, 279; Taylor v. Russell, [1892] A. C. 244, 255. But a mortgagee of shares by blank transfer, where the transfer requires to be under hand only, has, perhaps, only authority to insert his own name—not that of a sub-mortgagee—and procure registration of himself; though, after he has done this, he can transfer his mortgage title; see France v. Clark (1883), 22 Ch. D. 830; 26 Ch. D. 257, C. A.; and p. 132, ante.

before the 1st January, 1882, he could, on being paid off, refuse to transfer the mortgaged premises to anyone who would by the transfer be in the position of mortgagee, and he could only be required to reconvey to the person entitled to the equity of redemption (a). Now, however, where a mortgagor is entitled to redeem, he has, by statute, whenever the mortgage was made, and notwithstanding any stipulation to the contrary, power to require the mortgagee, instead of reconveying, to assign the mortgage debt and convey the mortgaged property to any third person, as the mortgagee directs (b). This power, however, cannot be exercised if the mortgagee is or has been in possession (c).

Where there are subsequent incumbrancers, the power can be exercised by any incumbrancer or by the mortgagor. Any incumbrancer can exercise it in preference to the mortgagor, and as between incumbrancers it is exercisable in the order of their priority (d).

The mortgagor can, however, only require the mortgagee to transfer upon the terms on which he would be bound to reconvey (e), that is, not merely on the terms as to payment of principal, interest, and costs, but on the terms of reconveyance generally; and if, owing to the equity of redemption being settled, the reconveyance would be to the tenant for life as trustee for all parties entitled, the tenant for life cannot as of right require a transfer to his nominee absolutely (f).

(b) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 15 (1), (3). In this Act "mortgage" includes charge (ibid., s. 2 (vi.)), and hence a shareholder can require the company to transfer to his nominee its lien on his shares for a debt due from him (Everitt v. Automatic Weighing Machine Co., [1892] 3 Ch. 506).

(c) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 15 (2). The case of the mortgagee being in possession is excluded, because he remains liable to account as mortgagee in possession notwithstanding the transfer (see pp. 199, 200, post); and though a transfer at the request of the mortgagor or of an incumbrancer might release him from this liability as regards the mortgagor or such incumbrancer, he would not be released as regards other persons interested in the equity of redemption. Hence, after a mortgagee has been in possession, he cannot with safety transfer his security except under the direction of the court; see Hall v. Heward (1886), 32 Ch. D. 430, 435, C. A.

(d) Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), s. 12. This provision overruled the construction placed on the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 15, in Teevan v. Smith (1882), 20 Ch. D. 724, C. A., namely, that the mortgagee could only be required to transfer at the direction of a person who could call for a reconveyance, that is, in the case of subsequent incumbrancers, the second mortgagee. Perhaps, in a foreclosure suit, the mortgagee cannot be required to transfer to a person who is not a party (Smithett v. Hesketh (1890), 44 Ch. D. 161). The statutes do not authorise a first mortgagee to join in a conveyance on a sale by the mortgagor to the prejudice of a subsequent incumbrancer (West London Commercial Bank v. Reliance Permanent Building Society (1885), 29 Ch. D. 954, C. A.).

317. The mortgage security consists of the debt and the mortgaged property, and a complete transfer includes an assignment of the debt and a conveyance of the property; but either may be assigned or conveyed separately. An assignment of the debt, with a reservation of the security to the assignor, leaves the assignor as the person who is the proper party in foreclosure or redemption, though he is a trustee of any money thereby obtained for the assignee of the debt (g). A transfer of the security without an assignment of the debt carries the benefit of the debt so far as it is charged on the property, since the mortgagor cannot redeem without paying the debt to the transferee (h).

318. The form of the transfer varies according as the mortgagor is or is not a party, and according as he has or has not incumbered the equity of redemption; and also according to the nature of the mortgaged property (i). Where the mortgagor is a party he usually enters into a new covenant with the transferee for payment of the mortgage debt and interest; but, whether there is a new covenant or not, the original debt is assigned in order that it may be kept alive for the protection of the transferee against subsequent incumbrancers (k), though the old covenant is in effect extinguished as regards the mortgagor if he enters into a new covenant inconsistent with it (l).

The assignment of the debt is also expressed to include the full benefit of all powers, rights, remedies and securities given by the mortgage for securing the principal and interest, and these words operate as showing an intention that any express power of sale and requesting a transfer was indebted to the inheritance for arrears of interest which he should have kept down, and this circumstance was a factor in the decision.

(g) Morley v. Morley (1858), 25 Beav. 253, 258. But where a legal mortgagee makes a voluntary settlement of the debt and does not transfer the security, this is an incomplete gift which will not be assisted in equity (Woodford v. Charnley (1860), 28 Beav. 96; Bizzey v. Flight (1876), 24 W. R. 957; see title GIFTS, Vol. XV., p. 414); contra, where the settlement trustees have power to dispose of the mortgaged property (Re Patrick, Bills v. Tatham, [1891] 1 Ch. 82, C. (h) Jones v. Gibbons (1804), 9 Ves. 407, 411. Hence, where an incumbrancer pays off a prior mortgage and takes a conveyance of the property, the debt is kept alive without express assignment as a charge on the property (Phillips v. Gutteridge (1859), 4 De G. & J. 531, C. A.); see p. 324, post.

(k) See ibid., Vol. VIII., p. 826. The production by the transferor's solicitor of a deed of transfer, with a receipt, in the body of the deed or indorsed thereon, for the mortgage money, is a sufficient authority for payment to the solicitor; see Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 56; Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 17 (1). other remedies shall be kept alive (m); but they are not necessary in order to give the transferee the full benefit of the mortgage. In general, express powers are so framed as to pass to a transferee (n), and the statutory powers are vested in him by virtue of the provision that "mortgagee" includes any person from time to time deriving title under the original mortgagee (o).

securities.

319. Collateral securities for the mortgage debt must be assigned expressly; they do not pass under general words giving the transferee the benefit of the mortgage security (p). Unless the transferor has agreed to hold them for the transferee he will, on being paid off in full by the transferee, hold them in trust for the mortgagor (q).

New
redemption.

320. In a transfer of a mortgage of freehold or leasehold property, the property is conveyed to the transferee subject to the existing equity of redemption (r); or, if the mortgagor is a party and has not incumbered the equity of redemption, so that he is in a position to deal with it, the conveyance may be made free from the old equity of redemption and subject to a new equity of redemption.

Transfer of

321. Where the mortgaged property is copyhold, the transfer will vary according as the mortgage was effected by covenant to surrender, or by conditional surrender, or by surrender followed by admittance (s). If there was only a covenant to surrender, and there has been no surrender in pursuance of it, the transferor assigns the benefit of the covenant (a), and, if the mortgagor is a party and has not incumbered the equity of redemption, a new covenant by him to surrender is added (b). If there has been a Roberts* (1852), 15 Beav. 558); and where a mortgage is given for a further advance, any express powers on which the mortgagee relies should, for the same reason, be mentioned in the second mortgage (Curling v. Shuttleworth (1829), 6 Bing. 121). A recital in a transfer that it is not intended to exercise the power of sale does not necessarily extinguish it (Boyd v. Petrie, supra). The express assignment of the benefit of securities will not keep alive the liability of a surety which, by other terms of the deed, is released (Bolton v. Buckenham, [1891] 1 Q. B. 278, C. A.).

conditional surrender, and the mortgagor is a party and has not made any further surrender or otherwise incumbered the property, the conditional surrender is vacated and the mortgagor makes a new conditional surrender to the transferee; but if the mortgagor is not a party or has further incumbered the property, the transferor covenants to surrender to the transferee (c). The transferor may then be admitted and surrender to the transferee subject to the equity of redemption, or, to avoid expense, the transferee may rely on the transferor's covenant. If there has been a surrender followed by admittance, the transferor should surrender to the transferee subject to the equity of redemption (d).

322. On the transfer of a building society mortgage the mortgagor should be a party, since it is doubtful whether the transferee can exercise the express power of sale which is usually contained in such a mortgage (e); but if an advance made by a subsequent incumbrancer is used, in whole or in part, in paying off the building society, who are legal mortgagees, he has, as between himself and a mesne incumbrancer, the better equity to call for the legal estate, and the effect of an indorsed receipt by the building society is to vest in him the legal estate (f). He can then hold the legal estate as security for the money used in paying off the building society, and also, if he has no notice of the mesne incumbrance, for his entire advance (g).

323. Upon a mortgage to trustees it is the practice not to disclose the trust, and when a transfer is made to new trustees it is sufficient to recite that they have become entitled in equity to the mortgage debt and securities on a joint account (h). This justifies the transfer to them and the trust will still be kept off the title (i). A married woman can transfer or join in the transfer of a mortgage as though she were a feme sole, whether she is entitled as mortgagee on her own account (k) or as trustee (l).

The transfer must bear a stamp of 6*d.* for every £100 or fractional part of £100 of the amount transferred, exclusive of interest not in arrear (m); that is, on the nominal value of the mortgage debt and arrears of interest, notwithstanding that a less sum is paid by the transferee (n); but where the transfer is made for effectuating the appointment of a new trustee (o), or the retirement of a trustee, although no new trustee is appointed (p), the duty is limited to 10*s.* The fact that the transfer is stamped with 10*s.*, instead of ad valorem, does not disclose the trust (q).

Costs.

325. The costs on a transfer of mortgage are dealt with elsewhere (r).

transfer.

326. A transfer of a mortgage is usually made by deed, and this is essential in order to pass the legal estate in real or leasehold property; but, as regards the mortgage debt, an assignment under hand only is effectual, notwithstanding that it was created by deed (s); and an assignment under hand is effectual to pass any equitable interest in property which is vested in the mortgagee (t).

How far

essential.

A deposit of title deeds by way of security does not create a pledge of the deeds, but confers on the mortgagee an equitable interest in the property (u), and this should be assigned in writing (a); but a transferee who pays off the mortgagee and takes delivery of the deeds is entitled to stand in the mortgagee's place, and in effect the equitable charge can thus be assigned for value without writing (b).

(m) Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Sched. I., "Mortgage." As to stamp duty on mortgages, see p. 134, ante. A transfer of a stock mortgage is stamped on the money value of the stock, presumably at the date of transfer (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 87 (1)). The transfer is not stamped with additional duty by reason of its including additional security or any new provision in relation to the mortgage debt (ibid., s. 87 (3)). In applying this provision the substance of the transaction is to be looked at, and the transaction may be a transfer notwithstanding that the debt is not formally assigned and the old equity of redemption is extinguished (Wale v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1879), 4 Ex. D. 270). If there is a further advance, this will carry ad valorem mortgage duty (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Sched. I., "Mortgage"); see p. 136, ante.

327. A mortgage of freehold or leasehold land made by statutory mortgage (c) may be transferred by statutory transfer (d). A deed of statutory transfer purports to convey and transfer to the transferee the benefit of the mortgage (e), and the effect is to vest in the transferee (f) (1) the right to sue for and receive the mortgage debt and interest, and to sue on the covenants with, and to exercise all the powers of, the mortgagee (g); and (2) all the estate and interest of the mortgagee in the mortgaged land, subject to redemption (h).

329. A statutory mortgage of a ship or shares in a ship is transferred by execution of the form of transfer indorsed on the mortgage (q). If there is a collateral agreement accompanying it (r), this must be separately assigned.

330. A registered bill of sale can be transferred so as to constitute a valid security in favour of the transferee (s); but if the bill of sale is unregistered, the transfer, in order to create an effective security, requires the same formalities as an original bill of sale (t).

331. The value of the mortgage debt to the transferee will depend on the soundness of the security, and he may purchase the debt and security at less than the nominal amount of the debt; but notwithstanding that he has done so, he is entitled to recover the whole amount due at the time of the transfer (a), unless he stands in a position which would make this inequitable (b). The rule applies not only in favour of a stranger who purchases the mortgage debt (c), but also in favour of a creditor (d) or subsequent incumbrancer (e), or any other person interested in the estate, such as a reversioner, provided that he did not create the charge (f); and it applies both against the mortgagor (g) and his heirs (h), and against a purchaser of or incumbrancer on the equity of redemption (i). The conveyance to the transferee operates in the same manner as an ordinary conveyance of land, and does not, in the absence of special words, give the transferee a title to rents in arrear at the date of the transfer (o); and, where interest is in arrear at the date of transfer and the mortgagor does not concur, the transferee, on paying the arrears to the transferor, cannot treat them as principal so as to carry future interest (p). The mortgagee and the persons claiming under him cannot, without the privity of the mortgagor, add to what is due or turn interest into principal (q).

Originally the debt was only assignable in equity; the assignee had to sue in the name of the assignor, and was therefore liable to be met by any defence or right of set-off available for the mortgagor against the assignor; thus the assignee of a chose in action was not in the position of a purchaser of real estate who to the debt, the same rule extends to this portion of the security, and the transferee can only hold the property as security for repayment of the amount properly due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee at the date of assignment, allowing for any claims which the mortgagor may on his side have against the mortgagee and which are part of the mortgage transaction (s).

As regards the amount originally advanced on the mortgage, the mortgagor's receipt contained in or indorsed on the mortgage deed is usually a sufficient protection to a transferee (t). In favour of a transferee of the mortgage for value, who has no notice that the money was not advanced, the receipt is conclusive (a); but, if the mortgage was created in circumstances which call for inquiry, he is bound, if he has notice of such circumstances (b), to inquire whether the advance was made, and cannot recover more than the actual advance (c), unless there are special circumstances depriving the mortgagor of the benefit of this exception (d).

took the legal estate for value without notice (Cockell v. Taylor (1852), 15 Beav. 103, 117); and though by statute the debt can now be assigned at law, yet the statute expressly makes the assignment subject to equities which would, apart from the statute, have priority over the right of the assignee (Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25 (6); Re Milan Tramways Co., Ex parte Theys (1882), 22 Ch. D. 122, 127). In Judd v. Green (1875), 45 L. J. (CH.) 108, and Nant-y-glo and Blaina Ironworks Co. v. Tamplin (1876), 35 L. T. 125, BACON, V.-C., held that where the mortgagor's equity was to set aside the mortgage, a transferee for value had a better equity and was entitled to his security; but this is opposed to the general principle and is doubtful. Where a security given by a company is invalid, a transferee who takes after a winding-up order cannot maintain it against the liquidator, even if he could have done so against the company (Re Gwelo (Matabeleland) Exploration and Development Co., Williamson's Claim, [1901] 1 I. R. 38, C. A.). See, further, title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 102 et seq.

(t) See titles DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 464; ESTOPPEL, Vol. XIII., p. 371; and see title FRAUDULENT AND VOIDABLE CONVEYANCES, Vol. XV., p. 115.

(a) This was formerly the rule in equity (Bickerton v. Walker (1885), 31 Ch. D. 151, C. A.), and the rule has received statutory confirmation by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 55, which provides that a receipt for consideration money in the body of a deed or indorsed thereon shall in favour of a subsequent purchaser—which includes a mortgagee (ibid., s. 2 (viii.))—not having notice that the money was not in fact paid, wholly or in part, be sufficient evidence of the payment of the whole amount (Bateman v. Hunt, [1904] 2 K. B. 530, C. A.; see Re Gwelo (Matabeleland) Exploration and Development Co., Williamson's Claim, supra, at p. 55). Hence, although no money has been in fact advanced, the mortgagor's receipt is conclusive in favour of a transferee (French v. Hope (1887), 56 L. J. (CH.) 363). Parker v. Clarke (1861), 30 Beav. 54, contra, is overruled by Bickerton v. Walker, supra.

(b) Bateman v. Hunt, supra; see, for example (solicitor and client), title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 465.

(c) See Gresley v. Mousley (1862), 3 De G. F. & J. 433, C. A.; Powell v. Browne (1907), 97 L. T. 167.

(d) Thus, if the client has handed the mortgage deed containing the receipt to the solicitor for the purpose of enabling him to raise money, he is estopped, as against a sub-mortgagee, from saying that the original amount was not advanced (Powell v. Browne (1907), 97 L. T. 854, C. A., reversing on this ground Powell v. Browne (1907), 97 L. T. 167); and see title ESTOPPEL, Vol. XIII., p. 371.

As regards dealings with the mortgage debt subsequent to the creation of the mortgage, the rule referred to above (e) applies, and the transferee of the mortgage takes it, when the mortgagor is no party to the transfer, subject to the state of accounts then subsisting between the mortgagor and mortgagee (f). He must at his peril inquire what is due on the mortgage, and if all or part of the principal has been paid off by the mortgagor, or has been discharged by receipt of rents and profits, the transferee, although he takes without notice, cannot set up again the whole debt against the mortgagor (g). Further, whatever the mortgagor can claim by way of set-off or mutual credit against the mortgagee, he can equally claim against the transferee (h). Hence, for the protection of the transferee, it is proper, either to make the mortgagor a party to the transfer, or to obtain an admission from him in writing that the sum claimed by the transferor is really due (i).

334. Moreover, the mortgagor is entitled to make payments to the mortgagee, whether of principal or interest, and to have credit for them as against the transferee after the transfer until he has received notice of it (k). Such notice may be actual or constructive (l). The mortgagor is not, by reason of omitting to call for production of the mortgage deed on payment of part of the principal (m), or even on payment of the whole (n), guilty of such negligence as to be postponed to the transferee, the latter being on his side guilty of negligence in not having given notice of the assignment. A payment, to be good against the transferee, need not be made in money; it may be made in any manner which is equivalent to payment, for instance by delivery of goods (o), or by a release founded on any fair and bonâ fide arrangement (p). But the payment must be made to the mortgagee or to a person authorised to receive it on his behalf (q).

335. Although there has been no actual transfer of the mortgage, a person who advances money for the purpose of paying it off, and whose money is thus applied, becomes an equitable assignee of the mortgage and is entitled to have it kept alive for his benefit (r). If he advances the money at the request of the mortgagor in order to prevent the equity of redemption from being forfeited, this result is assisted on the ground of salvage, and he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee (s). But the doctrine is not confined to such cases. Although there is no question of salvage (a), and even though the mortgagor is not a party (b), a stranger who pays off a mortgage is presumed to intend to keep it alive for his own benefit, and effect is given to this intention. The result is the same notwithstanding that he contemplated taking a different security, in which case he is entitled to the benefit of the old mortgage until the new security is given (b), and even though he has actually taken a mortgage of part of the property, since the remedy given by this later mortgage is not co-extensive with that given by the earlier (c).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Sub-Mortgage.

Marshall, supra*), provided that the balance has been appropriated to the debt before notice of the assignment (Rayne v. Baker (1859), 1 Giff. 241).

(r) See Cracknall v. Janson (1879), 11 Ch. D. 1, 18, C. A.; and title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., p. 403. Similarly, an assignee of the mortgaged property is a trustee for the person who finds the money to pay off the mortgagee (Walcott v. Condon (1853), 6 Ir. Jur. 15); and see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., p. 834.

(c) In such a case there is no merger of the mortgage in the charge (Chetwynd v. Allen, supra; see Bell v. Banks (1841), 3 Man. & G. 258). Where two properties, A and B, are comprised in the same mortgage, and the person entitled to the equity of redemption in A pays off the mortgage and takes a reconveyance of both properties, he will be entitled to have the mortgage kept alive, at any rate in part, on B, notwithstanding that he may not be able to keep it alive on A against subsequent incumbrancers (Taws v. Knowles, [1891] 2 Q. B. 564, 572, C. A.; see p. 318, post).

an advance to or a liability incurred by him. Hence the right of the mortgagee to dispose of his mortgage includes the right to deal with it by way of security, that is, to create a sub-mortgage; and this can be done either by actual transfer (d), so as, if the original mortgage is a legal mortgage, to create a legal sub-mortgage, or by equitable charge, whether by instrument under hand or seal, or by deposit of deeds (e). The sub-mortgage is completed by giving notice to the mortgagor (f).

337. A sub-mortgage by transfer will, during the continuance of the sub-mortgage, place the sub-mortgagee in the position of a transferee of the original mortgage. He can, subject to any stipulations contained in the sub-mortgage, call in the original mortgage, and can exercise the mortgagee's right to sue for (g) and receive the mortgage money, and to realise the security (h). If he receives the mortgage money he will reconvey to the mortgagor, and, after satisfying his own debt, will account for the surplus to the mortgagee (i). If he realises the mortgage security by exercising the power of sale arising under the mortgage, he will set aside the amount due under that mortgage and pay the surplus to the mortgagor (k); and out of the amount so set aside he will retain the sub-mortgage debt and pay the remainder to the mortgagee.

There may also be a power of sale incident to the sub-mortgage (l), but the exercise of this does not affect the mortgagor. The sub-mortgagee, in pursuance of this power, transfers the mortgage so as to extinguish the mortgagee's equity of redemption, and accounts for the surplus proceeds to the mortgagee. The mortgagor's equity of redemption, however, continues to exist, and the purchaser under the power of sale holds the mortgaged property subject to it.

338. Since the sub-mortgagee is in the position of a transferee of the mortgage, he takes, like any other transferee, subject to the accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee at the date of the sub-mortgage (m); and he will be affected by dealings between the mortgagor and mortgagee until the mortgagor has had notice of the sub-mortgage (n). But the mortgagor's receipt for the mortgage money, incorporated in the mortgage or indorsed thereon, is usually conclusive in favour of the sub-mortgagee that the original mortgage money was in fact advanced (o).

On the death of the mortgagee leaving a will, both the mortgage debt and the mortgaged property, if it is of freehold tenure (p), or consists of leaseholds or other personal property, vest, in the first instance, in the executors, notwithstanding any disposition contained in the will (q), and the executors can exercise the powers

(p) As to copyholds, see 184, post. As to a convict mortgagee, see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 235.

(q) It has been long settled that a mortgage security is personal estate, since the principal right of the mortgagee is to the money, and his right to the land is only a security for the money (Thornborough v. Baker (1675), 3 Swan. 628, 630; Canning v. Hicks (1686), 1 Vern. 412; Tabor v. Grover (1699), 2 Vern. 367; see Winn v. Littleton (1681), 1 Vern. 3, 4, n.; titles EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 91; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., pp. 234, 235); but formerly the mortgaged property, if it was real estate, might devolve on one person, while the mortgage debt devolved on another. In such case he who took the mortgaged estate by devise or by descent was a trustee for the person entitled to the mortgage debt (A.-G. v. Meyrick (1750), 2 Ves. Sen. 44, 46). It is now provided that where an estate or interest of inheritance, or limited to the heir as special occupant, in any tenements or hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, is vested by way of mortgage in any person solely, the same, on his death, notwithstanding any testamentary disposition, devolves to and becomes vested in his personal representatives or representative for the time being, in like manner as if the same were a chattel real vesting in them or him (Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 30). Hence, provided that the executors have not assented to any bequest of the mortgage, they hold the legal estate in freehold mortgaged property, and can either reconvey or transfer, or, if they exercise the power of sale, can convey. Under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 4 (repealed by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 30), they could reconvey on payment of all sums secured by the mortgage, but could not transfer (Re Brook's Mortgage (1877), 25 W. R. 841; Re Spradbery's Mortgage (1880), 14 Ch. D. 514), nor convey to the purchaser upon a sale (Re White's Mortgage (1881), 29 W. R. 820). This provision applied where the mortgagee died between the 7th August, 1874, and the 1st January, 1882, and perhaps where he had died before the earlier date; see Re White's Mortgage, supra. As to testamentary dispositions generally, see title WILLS. Formerly it was the practice to insert in wills an express devise of mortgage estates to the executors in order to avoid the inconvenience of the legal estate being separated from the mortgage debt. Where there was no such express devise, a general devise of real estate passed the legal estate in the testator's mortgages, unless an intention to the contrary could be collected from expressions in the will, or the purposes or objects of the of the mortgagee under the mortgage (r). A mortgage on land is an immovable, and its devolution is governed by the lex loci rei sitæ (s).

340. A specific bequest of the mortgage entitles the legatee both to the mortgage debt and to the mortgaged property (t), subject to the executors' assent; and, upon this assent being given, the legal title to the debt, and all the interest of the mortgagee in the mortgaged property, legal or otherwise, vests in the legatee (u). Mortgages can be bequeathed for charitable purposes (a).

testator (Braybroke (Lord) v. Inskip (1803), 8 Ves. 417; see Clarke v. Abbot (1741), Barn. (CH.) 457, 461). Such an intention to the contrary was shown where the testator imposed on the real estate a charge of debts or legacies (Leeds (Duke) v. Munday (1797), 3 Ves. 348; Re Horsfall (1825), M'Cle. & Yo. 292; Doe d. Roylance v. Lightfoot (1841), 8 M. & W. 553; Re Packman and Moss (1875), 1 Ch. R. 6 Eq. 597); or otherwise treated it as though it were his own, free from rights of other persons (such as an equity of redemption of a mortgagor), where, for example, he devised it in strict settlement (Thompson v. Grant (1819), 4 Madd. 438; A.-G. v. Vigor (1803), 8 Ves. 256, 276), or to tenants in common (Thirtle v. Vaughan (1854), 24 L. T. (o. s.) 5; Re Finney's Estate (1862), 3 Giff. 465; Martin v. Laverton (1870), L. R. 9 Eq. 563, 568; Re Franklyn's Mortgages, [1888] W. N. 217), or on trust for sale (Ex parte Marshall (1839), 9 Sim. 555). Further, a bequest of mortgages, or securities for money, or the right to receive moneys on mortgage, passed, not only mortgage debts, but also the legal estate in the mortgaged property, without any express devise of such estate (Renvoize v. Cooper (1822), 8 Madd. & G. 371; Mather v. Thomas (1833), 6 Sim. 115; (1833), 10 Bing. 44; Doe d. Guest v. Bennett (1851), 6 Exch. 892; Re Walker's Estate (1852), 21 L. J. T. 940); and this was so notwithstanding that the bequest was subject to payment of debts (Re Field's Mortgage (1851), 9 Hare, 414; Re King's Mortgage (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 644), or of debts and legacies (Knight v. Robinson (1856), 2 K. & J. 503), or that there was a trust for sale (Re Tyas, Ex parte Barber (1832), 5 Sim. 451); and a devise and bequest to trustees of real and personal estate in trust to get in debts owing on any security implied that they were to have full dominion over the mortgaged property, and hence they took the legal estate (Re Arrowsmith's Trusts, Re Thompson (1858), 4 Jur. (N. S.) 1123, C. A.).

(r) For the purposes of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 30, the personal representatives for the time being are to be deemed in law the heirs and assigns of the mortgagee within the meaning of all trusts and powers (ibid.); hence they can exercise all express powers conferred on the mortgagee, his heirs and assigns: further, by virtue of the definition of "mortgagee," as including any person from time to time deriving title under the original mortgagee (ibid., s. 2 (vi.)), they can exercise the statutory powers.

341. So long as the equity of redemption is not released or foreclosed or extinguished by lapse of time, the mortgagee's interest continues to be personal estate, notwithstanding that he may have entered into possession (b), and will not pass under a general devise of real estate (c); and if, in addition to his mortgage interest, the mortgagee has an estate in the property, a specific devise of the property will pass his proprietary estate only, and not his interest as mortgagee (d). But if he has entered into possession, a specific devise of the property will pass all his interest, and will, consequently, include the mortgage debt (e).

If, at the time of the mortgagee's death, the equity of redemption is already extinguished, the property is real estate in his hands and devolves as such (f); and if in his will he disposes of the property as though his interest were still that of mortgagee only, the property none the less passes under the disposition (g).

342. Where the mortgaged property is of copyhold tenure the devolution of the mortgagee's estate depends on whether he had or had not been admitted. If he had been admitted, then the statutory provision vesting the property in his personal representatives does not apply (h), and the right to be admitted on presentment of his death vests in his devisees, if he has devised his copyhold mortgage

(d) Thus, if he is mortgagee of a term and also reversioner, a specific devise does not carry the mortgage, notwithstanding that the term has at law merged in the reversion (Bowen v. Barlow (1872), 8 Ch. App. 171).

(e) Woodhouse v. Meredith (1816), 1 Mer. 450; Re Carter, Dodds v. Pearson, [1900] 1 Ch. 801; and a limitation in the will to the devisee and his heirs may make the mortgage real estate as between mortgagee and devisee, though it is personal estate as between mortgagee and mortgagor (Noys v. Mordaunt (1707), 2 Vern. 581, 582; Garret v. Evers (1730), Mos. 364). But where a testator, after specifically devising a house, sells it and takes a mortgage for part of the purchase-money, the specific devise does not carry the mortgage (Re Clowes, [1893] 1 Ch. 214, C. A.).

Between the 7th August, 1874, and the 1st January, 1882, the executors of a mortgagee of copyholds who had been admitted could surrender on payment off, but could not surrender on transfer of the mortgage or on sale (note (g), p. 182, ante). From the 31st December, 1881, to the 16th September, 1887 (the date of commencement of the Copyhold Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 73)), the right of admittance vested in the executors of the mortgagee (Re Hughes, [1884] W. N. 53; Hall v. Bromley, [1886] W. N. 211), and dealings by them with the mortgaged property between those dates were effectual (Re Mills' Trust (1887), 37 Ch. D. 312; see [1888] W. N. 155). Since the 16th September, 1887, the old law has been restored, and only the devisees or the customary heir can deal with the legal estate in the mortgaged property, at whatever date the mortgagee died (Re Mills' Trust, supra; affirmed on another point (1888), 40 Ch. estates (i), or otherwise in his customary heir-at-law (j). If he had not been admitted, the mortgage will have been taken either by conditional surrender, or covenant to surrender not followed by surrender (k). In either case an equitable interest in the copyholds is vested in the mortgagee, and this interest devolves on his personal representatives (l).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Devolution on Intestacy.

343. By virtue of the statutory provision already referred to (m), the mortgaged property, if of freehold tenure, devolves, on the death of a sole mortgagee intestate, on his administrator; and if it is leasehold or other personal property, it devolves in the same manner. Consequently both the mortgage debt and the mortgaged property devolve on the administrator, whose duty it is to get in the mortgage money and apply it in due course of administration, the beneficial interest in any surplus being in the next of kin (n); or, if it is not required for payment of debts and expenses, the administrator can, with the consent of the next of kin, transfer it to them, or some one or more of them, as part of the intestate's estate.

(k) See pp. 124 et seq., ante.

(l) There seems to be no reason for excluding equitable interests in copyholds from the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 30. The decisions that it applied to the legal estate before 1887 (see note (h), p. 184, ante) are authorities that it applied and still applies to equitable interests; compare Re Somerville and Turner's Contract, [1903] 2 Ch. 583, decided on the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 1.

(m) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 30; see note (g), p. 182, ante. Under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 4, the administrator, where the mortgagee died between the 7th August, 1874, and the 1st January, 1882, could reconvey on payment off of the mortgage, but could not transfer (see note (g), p. 182, ante). Formerly mortgaged freeholds devolved on the heir-at-law of the mortgagee, who held them as trustee for the administrator; see Ex parte Marshall (1839), 9 Sim. 555; and see title DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, Vol. XI., pp. 5, 6.

(n) That is, if the mortgage is still personal estate at the death of the mortgagee (Re Loveridge, Drayton v. Loveridge, [1902] 2 Ch. 859; see Flack v. Longmate (1845), 8 Beav. 420); but if the equity of redemption has been released or foreclosed in his life, or if he has entered into possession and the equity of redemption has been extinguished in his life by lapse of time, then freehold property is held by the administrator for the heir-at-law (Thompson v. Grant (1819), 4 Madd. 438; Re Loveridge, Pearce v. Marsh, [1904] 1 Ch. 518). As to copyholds, see p. 184, ante.

security :

(i.) As regards title ;

(ii.) as

SECT. 1.—Right to Protect his Security.

SUB-SECT. 1.—As against the Mortgagor.

344. The mortgagee, being entitled to the full benefit of the security which the mortgagor has agreed to give him, may protect it both as regards the title to the mortgaged property, and as regards the value of the property itself.

As regards the title to the mortgaged property, if the mortgagee has in the first instance taken an equitable title, but with an agreement for a legal mortgage (o), he is entitled to have a legal mortgage executed on request, and will be allowed any charges and expenses properly incurred in preparing the mortgage (p); and, if the mortgagor has conveyed to the mortgagee a defective title, and subsequently acquires an interest which enables him to cure the defect, the mortgagee can call upon him to perfect the mortgage title (q).

As regards the value of the property itself, the rights of the mortgagee possibly depend to some extent upon the circumstance that the mortgagor while in possession is a quasi-tenant (a), but, substantially, on the general principle that the mortgagee is entitled to have the security kept unimpaired. Hence, the mortgagor must not deal with the property so as to diminish its value (b). Moreover, the mortgagee, if in possession, is entitled to lay out any moneys necessary for the maintenance of the property (c).

Apart from the doctrine of waste (d), the mortgagee is entitled to restrain the mortgagor from conduct which would prejudice the

(q) "The doctrine of the Court of Chancery is, that if a man contracts to convey, or to mortgage, or to settle an estate, and he has not at the time of his contract a title to the estate, but he afterwards acquires such a title as enables him to perform his contract, he shall be bound to do so" (Smith v. Osborne (1857), 6 H. L. Cas. 375, per Lord CRANWORTH, L.C., at p. 390); as to mortgages, see Seabourne v. Powell (1686), 2 Vern. 11; and compare, as to sales, Taylor v. Debar (1676), 1 Cas. in Ch. 274; Smith v. Baker (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 223. The right of the mortgagee to have his title perfected gives him an equitable interest which will prevail against a subsequent incumbrancer who takes the legal estate with notice (Jennings v. Moore (1708), 2 Vern. 609), but not if he takes without notice (Oxwick v. Plumer (1708), Bac. Abr., tit. Mortgage (E.) 3 (7th ed., Vol. V., p. 664)). But where the mortgagor has no title at all at the time of the mortgage, and subsequently acquires a title, it has been doubted whether his heir is bound to convey (Morse v. Faulkner (1792), 1 Anst. 11).

(a) See Partridge v. Bere (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 604, 605, n.; Hitchman v. Walton (1838), 4 M. & W. 409; and p. 158, ante.

mortgage security (e); and upon a mortgage of goods, where the mortgagor retains the right of possession till default, an improper sale by him determines his right, and gives the immediate right of possession to the mortgagee, who can thereupon sue for conversion (f).

SECT. 1.
Right to Protect his

SUB-SECT. 2.—As against Third Parties.

345. The mortgagee is entitled, as against third parties, to protect his own or the mortgagor's title to the mortgaged property, and to maintain the value of that property. Thus, if the mortgagor's title is impeached, the mortgagee may take any step necessary to support it (g). If he is an equitable mortgagee, and third parties with an inferior title are proposing to dispose of the legal estate, he can obtain an injunction to restrain them (h). But in general he will have to defend, at his own expense, proceedings brought by third parties to impeach the mortgage security (i).

Right to

parties.

346. As regards the recovery or preservation of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee may be entitled to bring actions against third persons either by virtue of his legal or other estate in the property, or of his possession or immediate right to possession. Where he is legal owner of the property he is prima facie the proper person to bring actions which depend on ownership (k), and he may be a necessary party to such actions (l). But since the (e) Thus, under a mortgage of tolls by the trustees of a road, the trustees may be restrained from reducing the tolls (Crewe (Lord) v. Edleston (1857), 1 De G. & J. 93, 110, C. A.); under a mortgage of calls, the company cannot make a second call and get it in first at the expense of the mortgagee (Re Humber Ironworks Co., Ex parte Warrant Finance Co. (1868), 16 W. R. 667, C. A.); and where property is subject to a vendor's lien, a sale of part will be restrained (Re Blakely Ordnance Co., Blakely v. Dent (1867), 15 W. R. 663); and see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 251, 266, 267.

(h) London and County Banking Co. v. Lewis (1882), 21 Ch. D. 490, C. A. In general, questions between the mortgagee and mortgagor can be determined without bringing in third persons: where, for instance, the mortgagee sues to compel disentailing by a tenant in tail in pursuance of his contract, persons who are not parties to the contract need not be joined (Petre v. Duncombe (1848), 7 Hare, 24); but where, as in redemption and foreclosure, other persons claiming an interest in the equity of redemption are affected, they must be made parties (Evans v. Jones (1853), Kay, 29); and see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 251, 252.

(i) Parker v. Watkins (1859), John. 133; see p. 238, post. But where in an action for the execution of trusts, the beneficiaries desire to impeach a mortgage by the trustees, and for that purpose make the mortgagee a party, he will apparently, if successful, be allowed his costs; see Langton v. Langton (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 30, C. A.

(k) Thus where a restrictive covenant has been entered into with the mortgagee, he is the person to sue on it so long as the title remains in him; if the covenant is not required for the purpose of his security, he should sue at the instance of, and on being indemnified by, the persons entitled to the benefit of the covenant (Manners (Lord) v. Johnson (1875), 1 Ch. D. 673). As to the rights of a mortgagee of a co-owner of a mine against the other co-owners, see title MINES, MINERALS, AND QUARRIES, Vol. XX., p. 556.

beneficial interest, subject to the mortgagee's security, is in the mortgagor, the mortgagor can usually sue in his own name (m), and, while he is in possession, the right to do so in certain cases is conferred on him by statute (n).

347. Where the mortgagee is in possession of land he can sue a third party in trespass (o); and after entry, his right of possession relates back to the time when his right to possession accrued, so as to enable him to maintain an action for trespass committed by a stranger before his entry. This is so whether the mortgagee has the legal estate or not (p). Further, where he is in possession, or has the immediate right to possession of goods, he can sue for trespass or conversion, or to recover the goods (q). But these actions are not open to him if the mortgagor is entitled under the mortgage to retain possession till a certain event—such as demand of payment and default,—and that event has not happened (r); though, if the mortgage is by way of assignment to the mortgagee upon trust to allow the mortgagor to remain in possession till demand of payment, the mortgagee is considered to have the right to immediate possession upon the analogy of the case of trustee and cestui que trust (s).

ownership, it may be necessary to join the mortgagee; if, for instance, it is necessary for the legal estate to be before the court, or if accounts have to be taken which should be made binding on the mortgagee; see Van Gelder, Apsimon & Co. v. Sowerby Bridge United District Flour Society (1890), 44 Ch. D. 374, 392, C. A.

(o) Perhaps he can do so also if he has the immediate right to possession as against the mortgagor, for it has been said that a lessor at will can sue in trespass (Bro. Abr., tit. "Trespass," pl. 131); and see p. 159, ante: but if the security is by way of demise, the mortgagee cannot sue in trespass before he has entered (Wheeler v. Montefiore (1841), 2 Q. B. 133, 142; Doe d. Parsley v. Day (1842), 2 Q. B. 147, 156). As to trespass generally, see title TRESPASS.

(p) Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation v. Ilford Gas Co., [1905] 2 K. B. 493, C. A.

(q) Trespass, trover and detinue were all possessory actions, and the plaintiff had to show either actual possession or the right to immediate possession (Gordon v. Harper (1796), 7 Term Rep. 9; see title ACTION, Vol. I., pp. 41, 43, 44). Thus a mortgagee in possession of goods, or a pledgee, is the proper person to sue in trover or detinue (Sewell v. Burdick (1884), 10 App. Cas. 74, 92; Bristol and West of England Bank v. Midland Rail. Co., [1891] 2 Q. B. 653, C. A.), though the mortgagor or pledgor, on tendering the money due, is entitled to sue the mortgagee or pledgee in trover (Franklin v. Neate (1844), 13 M. & W. 481, 484); and, similarly, as to a vendor who retains possession of goods subject to his lien (Lord v. Price (1874), L. R. 9 Exch. 54). Under the Bills of Lading Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111), s. 1, the indorsee of a bill of lading, to whom the property in the goods therein mentioned passes, has transferred to and vested in him all rights of suit in respect of the goods, but apparently an indorsement by way of mortgage does not pass the property for this purpose (Sewell v. Burdick, supra, at p. 96); see Burgos v. Nascimento (1908), 100 L. T. 71; and see titles SALE OF GOODS; TROVER AND DETINUE.

(s) White v. Morris (1852), 11 C. B. 1015; compare Barker v. Furlong, [1891] 2 Ch. 172.

Where the mortgagee is entitled to sue in trover he can recover as damages the full value of the goods (t), whether he is or is not liable to account for any surplus to the mortgagor (u).

348. A mortgagee, generally, is entitled to bring proceedings to prevent the deterioration of his security. Where the property is taken for public purposes, notice to treat must be served on him as well as on the mortgagor (a). If the property consists of licensed premises, the mortgagee can appeal to quarter sessions against non-renewal of the licence (b). A prior mortgagee is also entitled to an injunction to prevent the mortgaged property being taken or dealt with by a subsequent incumbrancer (c). But the mortgagee cannot obtain an injunction unless he is prejudiced by the conduct complained of (d).

349. Where the mortgage vests the legal estate in the mortgaged property in the mortgagee and no provision is made for retention of possession by the mortgagor (e), the mortgagee is entitled to enter at any time after the execution of the mortgage, notwithstanding that there has been no default on the part of the mortgagor (f), or that a bill of exchange has been given for the debt (g).

But a mere power of sale on default does not, it seems, give a right of entry except on default, and then only for the purpose of a sale (Watson v. Waltham (1835), 2 Ad. & El. 485). It is optional with the mortgagee whether he takes possession or not. He can foreclose without taking possession (Penrhyn (Lord) v. Hughes (1799), 5 Ves. 99, 106). Where a second mortgage has been created by conveyance of the equity of redemption, and the first mortgagee does not take possession, the second mortgagee, since he is entitled to possession as against the mortgagor (h), has, it would seem, a similar right of entry (i), and certainly so if the mortgage expressly gives him the right (k).

The registered proprietor of a charge registered under the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 and 1897 (l), may also, for the purpose of obtaining satisfaction of any moneys due to him under the charge, at any time during the continuance of the charge, enter upon the land charged, subject to the rights of prior registered incumbrancers (m).

An incumbrancer not included in the foregoing classes has no right to possession of the land, but if his charge is created by instrument under seal he can appoint a receiver (n), and if his charge arises otherwise he can obtain the appointment of a receiver from the court (o). If he does not obtain a receiver, but obtains an order for sale, he is entitled to the rents from the date of the order (p).

(i) Formerly an action of ejectment might be defeated, except as against a mere wrongdoer, by showing that the plaintiff had not the legal estate, where, for instance, there was an outstanding term; though an express power of re-entry, created prior to the term, would prevail (Doe d. Butler v. Kensington Lord) (1846), 8 Q. B. 429). But an action for recovery of land is not liable to be defeated on this ground. All that is necessary is that the plaintiff should be entitled to possession as against the defendant (General Finance, Mortgage, and Discount Co. v. Liberator Permanent Benefit Building Society (1878), 10 Ch. D. 15, 24; Antrim County Land Building and Investment Co. v. Stewart, [1904] 2 I. R. 357, C. A.; see Campion v. Palmer, [1896] 2 I. R. 445, C. A.). Allen v. Woods (1893), 68 L. T. 143, C. A., appears to favour the old rule, but there the plaintiff was only entitled under an executory trust, and it was necessary for the legal owner to be before the court in order that the trust might be established against him. Feehan v. Mandeville (1891), 28 L. R. Ir. 90, so far as it insisted on a legal estate in the plaintiff in ejectment, is not law, but the decision depended on the relative rights of the plaintiff (the assignee of a legal mortgage) and a sub-mortgagee to whom he had assigned the legal estate; it was considered that the mortgagor ought not to be compelled to give possession to the mortgagee in the absence of the sub-mortgagee. The dictum of NORTH, J., in Garfitt v. Allen, Allen v. Longstaffe (1887), 37 Ch. D. 48, 50, that an equitable mortgagee cannot take possession applies only where, as in that case, the incumbrance is by mere charge. As to equitable charges, see p. 83, ante. In Langton v. Langton (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 30, C. A., first mortgagees with an equitable estate were put into possession by the court.

The mortgagee does not entitle himself to earlier rents by giving notice to the tenants to pay the rents to him (Re Pearson, Ex parte Scott, supra), unless, of course, his mortgage entitles him to go into possession. In Re Keer, Ex parte Bignold (1832), 2 Deac. & Ch. 398, the mortgagee only asked for the rents from the date of the order for sale. But in Re Harvey, Ex parte Bignold (1827), 2 Gl. & J. 273, it was held that the mortgagee was entitled to the produce of the mortgaged property from the time of presenting a petition for sale, and in Re Feaver, Ex parte Smith (1844), 3 Mont. D. & De G. 680, he was allowed the rents from the date of an order for inquiry as to title, and not only from the date when the title was affirmed and an order for sale made. In Re Tills, Ex parte Alexander (1827), 2 Gl. & J. 275, Lord ELDON, L.C., held that the mortgagor's assignees in bankruptcy took the rents till the actual sale, but this ruling has not been followed; and as to the report of this case, see Re Norman, Ex parte Burrell, supra.

(a) Toms v. Wilson (1863), 4 B. & S. 455, Ex. Ch.; and if the demand is made by an agent, there is no default, and entry is unlawful, until the mortgagor has had an opportunity of inquiring into the alleged agency (Moore v. Shelley (1883), 8 App. Cas. 285, P. C.). If a mortgagee of goods seizes them too soon, the mortgagor recovers as damages, not the value of the goods, but the value of his interest in them (Brierly v. Kendall (1852), 17 Q. B. 937; Chinery v. Viall (1860), 5 H. & N. 288; Toms v. Wilson, supra); but a premature taking of possession does not prevent the mortgagee from taking possession in due time (Bramwell v. Eglinton (1864), 5 B. & S. 39). As to seizure of goods under the present law, see title BILLS OF SALE, Vol. III., p. 68.

The court will not interfere with the mortgagee's right to possession on account of the pendency of an administration action (Crowle v. Russell (1878), 27 W. R. 84, C. A.), or of a suggestion that the mortgage deed is invalid (Re Hart, Ex parte Bayly (1880), 15 Ch. D. 223, C. A.).

(c) Doe d. Fisher v. Giles (1829), 5 Bing. 421; Jolly v. Arbuthnot (1859), 4 De G. & J. 224, 236; see pp. 158, 159, ante. In Keech d. Warne v. Hall, supra, the mortgagor was described as tenant at will, but this analogy is misleading, and it is, perhaps, more correct to say that he remains at the will of the mortgagee; or that the mortgagee is entitled at any moment to treat him as a trespasser (Doe d. Roby v. Maissey (1828), 8 B. & C. 767; Jolly v. Arbuthnot, supra). But if by the contract the mortgagor is made tenant at will, he holds subject to the legal incidents of that relation (Re Skinner, Ex parte Temple and Fisher (1822), 1 Gl. & J. 216). entry is usually avoided by express provision that the mortgagee shall be entitled to enter without notice at any time after default in payment of the principal money (d).

352. When the mortgaged property is in the occupation of the mortgagor, or of a tenant of the mortgagor whose tenancy is not binding on the mortgagee (e), the mortgagee exercises his right to possession by either entering on the land if this can be done peaceably (f), or by bringing an action to recover possession of the land (g).

If the mortgaged property is in the occupation of a tenant whose tenancy is binding (h) on the mortgagee, the mortgagee exercises his right by giving the tenant notice to pay the rent to him (i).

353. Where a second mortgage contains an express power for the mortgagee to take possession, and the mortgagee gives notice to the tenant to pay rent to him, this, by virtue of the agreement, entitles the mortgagee to the rents as against a judgment creditor, apart from the question of the mortgagee's right to recover possession (k); and an equitable mortgagee by deposit who gives notice to, and receives rent from, the tenant, can retain it as against him (l).

354. If, at a time when the mortgagee wishes to go into possession, he finds a receiver appointed by the court in possession, and the rights of prior incumbrancers have not been preserved, he must apply in the action in which the receiver was appointed for the discharge of the receiver and for liberty to take possession (m). But if the existence of prior incumbrancers is known, the order is made subject to, or with a proviso that it shall not affect their right to take possession (n). SUB-SECT. 3.—What Amounts to Possession.

355. A mortgagee who is entitled to vacant possession of the property acquires possession of the whole of the property by entering on part, provided that the property is so bounded and defined that entry on part can be regarded as entry on the whole (c); but a mortgagee is entitled to limit his possession to part of the property, and, if such is his intention, he will not be charged as being constructively in possession of the whole (d).

part.

Even though the entry of the mortgagee is forcible so as to be a breach of the Statutes of Forcible Entry (e), and subject him to penalties under the criminal law (f), yet, directly he has entered, his right to possession gives him the possession for civil purposes, and he can treat the mortgagor or any other person who is on the property as a trespasser (g).

Forcible entry.

A guardian who takes an assignment of a mortgage on the ward's estate will be treated as mortgagee in possession (h). A solicitor, who pays off a mortgage for a client and receives the rents, receives them as agent for the client, and is not a mortgagee in possession (i).

assumes the liability of a mortgagee in possession (m). When he gives notice to the tenants to pay their rents to him, it is equally clear that he intends to go into receipt of rents and profits, and this, as regards the liability to account, is equivalent to taking possession (n).

But if he merely receives from the mortgagor's agent a sum equal to the rents which the agent has collected, while the agent has not served on the tenants any notice on behalf of the mortgagee, this is not enough. In order to burden himself with the liability of a mortgagee in possession, the mortgagee must act in such a manner as to substitute himself for the mortgagor in the control and management of the estate (o).

Where the mortgage deed creates a tenancy in the mortgagor under the mortgagee at a rent (p), this does not put the mortgagee in possession so as to make him liable to account to subsequent incumbrancers for the amount of the rent reserved (q).

357. A mortgagee, when he has once taken possession, cannot give up possession (r), and usually the court will not relieve him of his liability by appointing a receiver; but in exceptional cases this will be done, where, for instance, the mortgagee by going into possession has got into a difficulty which puts him in an unfair position (s).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Rights of Mortgagee in Possession.(i.) Receipt and Application of Rents and Profits.

358. So long as the mortgagee allows the mortgagor to remain in possession, the latter, if in occupation, takes the profits of the land,

The mortgagee must either take possession or leave the mortgagor in possession (Heales v. M. Murray (1856), 23 Beav. 401). A receiver who, on being discharged, continues to receive the rents, and pays them to the mortgagee, will become the agent of the mortgagee so as to put the latter into possession (Horlock v. Smith, supra). As to the appointment of a receiver, see, generally, pp. 261 et seq., post.

(o) Noyes v. Pollock (1886), 32 Ch. D. 53, C. A. A mortgagee does not assume possession by insuring the property (Ward v. Cartar (1865), L. R. 1 Eq. 29); nor by merely making arrangements with the tenants, if they do not recognise him as landlord (ibid.).

and if only reversioner on leases or tenancies, takes the rents, in either case for his own use and without liability to account to the mortgagee (t). But the mortgagee on going into possession is entitled to take the rents and profits by virtue of the legal or equitable ownership which the mortgage confers upon him (a).

As regards tenancies created before the mortgage, or created by the mortgagor after the mortgage under an express or statutory power, the mortgagee, since he is entitled to the reversion, can require payment to himself of all arrears of rent then existing (b).

As regards tenancies created after the mortgage which are not binding on the mortgagee, he is not entitled to demand payment of the rents as such, but after notice from him to the tenants to pay the rents to him, they must not pay rents to the mortgagor, and they are justified in paying the rents to the mortgagee, since otherwise, on recovering possession, he would be entitled to recover the rents as mesne profits (c).

As to leases under the statutory power, see Municipal Permanent Investment Building Society v. Smith (1888), 22 Q. B. D. 70, C. A.; and p. 163, ante. The law on those points has not been affected by the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25 (5), or the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 10 (Re Ind, Coope & Co., Fisher v. The Co., Knox v. The Co., Arnold v. The Co., [1911] 2 Ch. 223). The rule applies to yearly as well as other tenancies, and the mortgagee can recover also an increased rent which the tenant has agreed with the mortgagor to pay after the date of the mortgage (Burrowes v. Gradin (1843), 1 Dow. & L. 213; see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 467, note (c)). But it is restricted to rents proper; it does not extend, in a mortgage of warehouses, to charges for warehousing goods, though called rents, and recoverable by statute by distraint and sale of the goods (Anderson v. Butler's Wharf Co. (1879), 48 L. J. (CH.) 824, or to freight (Rusden v. Pope (1868), L. R. 3 Exch. 269, 275). A mortgagee is not bound by a collateral agreement between the mortgagor and the lessee under a lease created before the mortgage (Thomas v. Jennings (1896), 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 5); but, if he takes his mortgage with knowledge that the land is used for a particular purpose, he cannot object to such user (Moreland v. Richardson (1857), 24 Beav. 33).

Technically the action for mesne profits is trespass, and requires that the mortgagee shall have been in possession during the time for which mesne profits are claimed (see Turner v. Cameron's Coalbrook Steam Coal Co. (1850), 5 Exch. 932); but upon entry by the mortgagee or judgment in ejectment and possession taken, his possession relates back to the date of the mortgage (see p. 188, ante), and he can recover the rent accrued due within six years (see title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., p. 97) during that period (Barnett v. Guildford (Earl) (1855), 11 Exch. 19, overruling Litchfield v. Ready (1850), 5 Exch. 939; Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation v. Ilford Gas Co., [1905] 2 K. B. 493, 498, C. A.; see Harris v. Mulhern (1875), 1 Ex. D. 31). The mortgagee can now insert a claim for mesne profits in his writ for recovery of possession

The result is that whether the leases are or are not binding on the mortgagee, he is entitled both to arrears existing when he goes into possession, and also to rent accruing due subsequently. If the tenant has paid rent to the mortgagor before it was due, this is not a good payment against the mortgagee as regards rent accruing due after notice of the mortgage has been given to the tenant, and the tenant is liable to pay such rent over again to the mortgagee (d).

359. Where a receiver has been appointed, the mortgagee obtains possession by applying for his discharge (e): whether rents then received by and remaining in the hands of the receiver belong to the mortgagee or not depends on the object of the appointment of the receiver (f). If he has been appointed in proceedings only affecting the title to the equity of redemption, for example, in proceedings to administer the trusts of the will of the mortgagor (g); or in other proceedings in which the title of the mortgagee is not in question (h), the mortgagee is not entitled to past rents, but only to rents paid after he applied to discharge the receiver (i). But if the receiver is appointed on behalf of incumbrancers on the property generally, or to settle a dispute as to title in which the mortgagee is interested, the mortgagee is entitled to rents in the hands of the receiver (j); and where sequestrators have been appointed, the mortgagee is entitled to rents received by the sequestrators and remaining in their hands when he makes his claim (k).

360. The rents received by the mortgagee are applicable in the first instance in paying the current outgoings, such as rents, rates and taxes, repairs, insurance premiums and the interest on prior of land (R. S. C., Ord. 18, r. 2; Dunlop v. Macedo (1891), 8 T. L. R. 43; see Brandreth v. Shears, [1883] W. N. 89); and he will be allowed to prove when his title to possession accrued, and to recover from the tenant the rents, accrued within six years before action, which have not been paid to the mortgagor.

A receiver holds, primâ facie, for the person who obtains his appointment; thus, it is believed that a first mortgagee cannot take rents in the hands of the receiver for an equitable mortgage. incumbrances (l): the balance is then applicable, first, in payment of interest on the mortgage debt and on expenses of improvements (m) and otherwise, which the mortgagee is entitled to add to principal; and secondly, in payment of the principal and of capital expenditure added to principal (n). The mortgagee is not restricted to paying his interest out of the rents unless special provision to that effect is made by the mortgage deed (o). The mode in which the rents are thus applied depends on whether the accounts are taken with or without rests (p).

Where the mortgage security includes a business carried on upon the mortgaged premises, the mortgagee on entering is entitled to carry on the business for a reasonable time with a view to sale (q). He does not thereby render himself liable on the existing contracts of the business, unless he adopts them so as to effect a novation (r), but he is personally liable on any new contracts into which he enters (s). this purpose (c), and the mortgagee on entering into possession is entitled to all the growing crops (d). The mortgagor is not, however, bound to account for crops which he has severed and taken away (e); and the mere cutting of the crops converts them into personal chattels, so that, if the mortgagee has not taken possession before the mortgagor's bankruptcy, they belong to his trustee in bankruptcy (f).

mortgagee.

An equitable mortgagee, who has an interest entitling him to possession as against the mortgagor (g), and who takes possession, is entitled, like a legal mortgagee, to the growing crops (h); and although he has no right to possession, yet if he peaceably obtains possession, he takes the crops as from that time (i); otherwise he is only entitled to the crops as from the date of an order for sale (i).

363. Apart from statutory or express powers, a mortgagee has no power to grant a lease without the mortgagor's consent (k), which will be binding on the mortgagor after redemption (l); but in the case of mortgages made since the 31st December, 1881, a mortgagee who is in possession (m), or who has appointed a receiver of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property (n), has the same rights of leasing and accepting surrenders of leases (o) as are enjoyed by a mortgagor in possession (p).

which, but for his wilful default or neglect, he might have received (q); that is, for everything which he has received, or might or ought to have received, while he continued in possession (r). The rule applies both to tangible property and to the goodwill of a business (s), and not only to rents and profits—such as the rents and profits of land, the profits of a business (t), or the royalties from a patent (u)—but also to the corpus of the mortgaged property (v). It is based on the principle that, since the property is only a security for the money, the mortgagee must be diligent in realising the amount due in order that he may restore the property to the mortgagor (w). But he does not account for profits arising from business done in connection with the mortgaged premises which do not arise from the premises (x).

The mortgagee accounts on the like footing to all persons interested in the equity of redemption, and he remains liable to

As to accounts between mortgagee and mortgagor generally, see pp. 215 et seq., post.

(r) Chaplin v. Young (No. 1) (1864), 33 Beav. 330, 337. The usual form of order is for an account of the rents and profits of the hereditaments comprised in the mortgage received by the mortgagee, or by any other person for the order or use of the mortgagee, or which, without the wilful default of the mortgagee, might have been so received (3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1896); see note to Harnard v. Webster (1725), Cas. temp. King, 53; and see pp. 219 et seq., 288, post.

(s) Mayer v. Murray (1878), 8 Ch. D. 424. Possibly, where stock is mortgaged, and the mortgagee makes a profit by selling and repurchasing, he must account for this; see Langton v. Waite (1869), 4 Ch. App. 402.

(t) Chaplin v. Young (No. 1), supra.

(u) But a co-owner of a patent, who is also mortgagee of the share of another co-owner, while bound to account to his mortgagor for royalties, need not account for the profits derived from his own use of the patent, since he is entitled to this use as co-owner (Steers v. Rogers, [1892] 2 Ch. 13, C. A.; compare Heyl-Dia v. Edmunds (1899), 48 W. R. 167). As to patent rights, see title PATENTS AND INVENTIONS.

(v) Thus if the assignee of a judgment debt issues execution on it, and thereby in effect goes into possession, but omits to proceed with the execution, whereby the debt is lost, he must account for it (Williams v. Price, supra); so, also, must an assignee of a debt who is empowered to sue (Ex parte Mure (1788), 2 Cox, Eq. Cas. 63, 75); but not a mere equitable assignee (Glyn v. Hood (1860), 1 De G. F. & J. 334, 348, C. A.). Where a lease is forfeited through the default of the mortgagee, he is liable (Perry v. Walker (1855), 3 Eq. Rep. 721). An account against a mortgagee in possession who has sold is on the footing of wilful default (Mayer v. Murray (1878), 8 Ch. D. 424; National Bank of Australasia v. United Hand-in-Hand and Band of Hope Co., supra; 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1958).

account notwithstanding that he has assigned the mortgage (y), unless he has assigned it under the order of the court (z).

The rule applies to a mortgage by way of trust for sale, and the mortgagee accounts as mortgagee in possession from the time when he enters into possession, but not before (a).

But the rule only applies when the mortgagee enters in his character as mortgagee, so that he knows that he is in possession and chargeable accordingly (b). Hence one who enters as a purchaser, and who, on the sale going off, has a lien for purchase-money which he has paid, is not liable to account as mortgagee in possession (c); and a mortgagee can escape the liabilities of a mortgagee in possession by entering as agent for a prior incumbrancer, but not, it seems, as agent for the mortgagor (d).

365. When the mortgaged property is let at the time of the mortgagee taking possession, he is charged with the rents at the rate reserved (e), provided that he could with due diligence have recovered them (f). When the property is not let, he must use due diligence to let it (g); and, if it remains unlet through his

A.; Re Metropolis and Counties Permanent Investment Building Society, Gatfield's Case, [1911] 1 Ch. 698. As to a trustee's liability to account, see title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

(b) Parkinson v. Hanbury (1867), L. R. 2 H. L. 1, 14: Thus a mortgagee in occupation as tenant does not account as mortgagee in possession (Page v. Linwood (1837), 4 Cl. & Fin. 399, 434, H. L.; compare Morony v. O'Dea (1809), 1 Ball & B. 109, 117); nor does a mortgagee of the inheritance who is in possession as purchaser of the life estate (Whitbread v. Smith (1854), 3 De G. M. & G. 727, 741, C. A.; compare Kensington (Lord) v. Bouverie (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 134, 144, C. A.; and see Blennerhassett v. Day (1812), 2 Ball & B. 104, 125). But where a tenancy is created in favour of the mortgagee after a second mortgage, the prior mortgagee accounts as mortgagee in possession to the second mortgagee (Gregg v. Arrott (1835), L. & G. temp. Sugd. 246).

(c) Parkinson v. Hanbury, supra, where, however, the contrary decision in Adams v. Swooner (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 44, 60, C. A., was not referred to. A vendor in possession, with a lien for the unpaid purchase-money, is not ordinarily chargeable as mortgagee in possession (Sherwin v. Shakspear (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 517, C. A.); though he may become so chargeable by insisting on retaining possession when he might properly give it up (Phillips v. Silvester (1872), 8 Ch. App. 173; see titles EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 99; LIEN, Vol. XIX., p. 15; SALE OF LAND).

(d) Re M'Kinley's Estate (1873), 7 I. R. Eq. 467, 470. The mortgagee must account, notwithstanding that the agent who received the rents is dead (Noyes v. Pollock (1885), 30 Ch. D. 336, C. A.).

(f) Noyes v. Pollock (1886), 32 Ch. D. 53, 61, C. A.; see Brandon v. Brandon (1862), 10 W. R. 287. A mortgagee must use the usual means to recover the rents, if they are likely to prove effectual (Bucks (Duke) v. Gayer (1684), 1 Vern. 258); but he is not bound to distrain on goods of a stranger which may be on the demised premises (Cocks v. Gray (1857), 1 Giff. 77; title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., p. 129). For recent restrictions on the right of distress, see the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 53); title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., p. 143.

(g) It has been said that the rent obtained will be deemed to be the same default, he is charged with the rents which ought to have been obtained (h). If by obtaining an advantage for himself (i), or by underhand dealing with the tenant (k), or by wantonly changing the tenant (l), the mortgagee lets the property at less than the full rent, he is charged with the full rent.

If the mortgagee goes into actual occupation himself (m), he will be charged with a fair occupation rent (n); but he is not to be charged a higher rent on account of improvements effected by himself, unless he is allowed the expense of the improvements (o).

The mortgagee is not liable for rent while the property, from its ruinous condition or otherwise, is incapable of beneficial occupation (p).

366. A mortgagee, if he has surplus rents in hand after satisfying his interest, can pay them to the mortgagor, provided that he has received no notice of any subsequent incumbrance, and neither he nor the mortgagor is liable to account for them to a subsequent incumbrancer (q); but so soon as the mortgagee has for the whole time of possession, unless the mortgagee shows the contrary (Blacklock v. Barnes (1725), Cas. temp. King, 53).

(h) The burden of proving wilful default is, in the first instance, on the party charging it; but if he shows that the premises were capable of being let, and were left vacant, the burden is shifted, and the mortgagee must prove that no tenant could be obtained (Metcalf v. Campion (1828), 1 Mol. 238; Brandon v. Brandon (1862), 10 W. R. 287). The mortgagee, if resident at a distance, is justified in acting on the advice of an agent as to letting the property (Brandon v. Brandon, supra). If the mortgagor is a party to any act to prevent the letting, this is an answer to the charge of wilful default (Metcalf v. Campion, supra): if he knows that the property is let at an undervalue, he should give notice of the fact to the mortgagee (Hughes v. Williams (1806), 12 Ves. 493).

(m) See Trulock v. Robey (1846), 15 Sim. 265, 273; Shepard v. Jones (1882), 21 Ch. D. 469, 475, C. A. Unless the mortgagee admits occupation, an inquiry will be directed (3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1959). The mortgagee is not chargeable with an occupation rent on the ground that, on selling the property, he has let the purchaser into possession before the date for completion (Shepard v. Jones, supra).

(n) Metcalf v. Campion, supra; Fee v. Cobine (1847), 11 I. Eq. R. 406, 410; Marriott v. Anchor Reversionary Co. (1861), 3 De G. F. & J. 177, 193, C. A. In Trimleston (Lord) v. Hamill (1810), 1 Ball & B. 377, it was said that the mortgagee would be charged with the utmost value the property was found to be worth; but this statement is too wide. If the mortgagee occupies under a lease from the mortgagor, he is chargeable only with the rent reserved if the amount is proper, notwithstanding that the lease is set aside (Gubbins v. Creed (1804), 2 Sch. & Lef. 214; Webb v. Rorke (1806), 2 Sch. & Lef. 661, 674).

(q) This is in accordance with the rule that the mortgagor is not bound to account for rents which the mortgagee allows him to receive (see p. 158, ante; Drummond v. St. Albans (Duke) (1800), 5 Ves. 433, 438). The rule applies to a mortgage for a term (Gresley v. Adderley, Gresley v. Heathcote (1818), 1 Swan. 573, 579), and of a life estate (Colman v. St. Albans (Duke) notice of a subsequent incumbrance entitling such incumbrancer to the rents and profits, he will be liable to the subsequent incumbrancer for any surplus rents paid to the mortgagor (r).

Where separate properties subject to separate mortgages are included in the same lease, the rent is apportioned between the two mortgagees, notwithstanding that by error the whole has been reserved to one of them (s).

(ii.) To Execute Repairs.

Extent of liability.

367. The liability of the mortgagee to keep the mortgaged premises in repair depends on the considerations that by taking possession he has excluded the mortgagor from control of the property, and that the rents are the proper fund out of which to provide for repairs. But the mortgagee is not judged by the degree of care which a man would take of his own property. He is chargeable in respect of gross negligence (t), and he must—at any rate to the extent of surplus rents in his hands after the interest due on his mortgage is satisfied—do such repairs as are required to maintain the premises in a proper state of preservation (a). On a prima facie case being made out, an inquiry as to deterioration will be directed (b). But the mortgagee is not bound to keep the premises in as good repair as he found them, and when he has done ordinary repairs, he will not be charged with deterioration due to the lapse of time (c); nor, where the buildings are in such a state that a prudent owner would pull them down and rebuild, is the mortgagee bound to do this (d).

(1796), 3 Ves. 25); and notwithstanding that a receiver is in possession, appointed otherwise than on behalf of the mortgagee (Flight v. Camac (1856), 25 L. J. (CH.) 654). It applies also to receipt by the mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy, unless he has retained the rents in violation of an agreement to apply them in payment of interest (Ex parte Calwell (1828), 1 Mol. 259).

(r) Berney v. Sewell (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 647, 650; Archdeacon v. Bowes (1824), 13 Price, 353, 368; see Maddocks v. Wren (1680), 2 Rep. Ch. 109 [209]; Holton v. Lloyd (1827), 1 Mol. 30, 31; Clark v. Cook (1849), 3 De G. & Sm. 333, 336. A second incumbrancer fortifies his title to receive surplus rents by taking proceedings to enforce his security (Parker v. Calcraft, Dunn v. Same (1821), Madd. & G. 11, 12); but where his mortgage is by conveyance of the equity of redemption, such proceedings are not necessary; see pp. 76, 190, ante.

368. The mortgagee must not burden the equity of redemption so as to make it more difficult for the mortgagor to redeem (e), and on redemption he must be able to hand back the property as far as possible in its original condition. Hence, he must not make a large outlay on permanent improvements unless he obtains the mortgagor's consent, or unless the mortgagor, after notice, acquiesces (f), nor may he change the character of the property, even though such change constitutes an improvement (g); but he may make reasonable improvements without notice to the mortgagor (h). On the other hand, the mortgagee is not bound to rebuild or to lay out large sums beyond the rent, for this would be to lend more money upon, perhaps, a deficient security (i). Expenditure properly made is allowed to the mortgagee in his accounts (j).

SECT. 2.
Right to Possession of the Mortgaged Property.
Extent of repair authorised.

(iii.) For Waste.

369. A mortgagee who takes the legal estate in fee simple becomes the absolute owner at law, and hence he cannot, in strictness, commit waste (k); but in equity he is subject to the rule that he must on redemption give back the property unimpaired, and, therefore, unless his security is deficient, he cannot destroy any part of the inheritance; if he does so, he must make good the loss to the mortgagor in taking the accounts (l).

General rule.

370. A mortgagee in possession has statutory power (m) to cut and sell timber (n) and other trees ripe for cutting, and not planted or left standing for shelter or ornament; and he may contract for any such cutting and sale, on the terms of the contract being completed within a year; but the power may be varied or excluded by the mortgage deed. The proceeds of any such cutting or sale are applied as rents and profits.

Power to cut and sell timber.

When the statutory power (m) does not apply, the mortgagee of buildings for decayed old buildings without changing their purpose (Marshall v. Cave (circa 1824), 3 L. J. (o. s.) (CH.) 57). As to insurance by the mortgagee, see pp. 122, 123, ante.

(e) The mortgagee must not improve the mortgagor out of his estate (Sandon v. Hooper (1843), 6 Beav. 246).

the fee simple may cut timber by virtue of his ownership without committing waste at law; but in equity he will be restrained unless his security is defective (o). In that case he may cut the timber and sell it (p), provided he applies the proceeds in payment of principal and interest (q).

A mortgagee in possession of agricultural land is liable for damage occasioned by his gross negligence in regard to cultivation (r); and he should take proper means for preventing damage by strangers; but he is not liable for waste committed under a claim of right which he has not authorised (s).

371. Waste committed by the mortgagee which is not justified by the terms or the deficiency of his security, in addition to rendering him liable to an injunction, may be a ground for depriving him of possession, either by replacing the mortgagor in possession or by the appointment of a receiver (t).

SECT. 3.—As regards Title Deeds.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Right to Custody.

372. A mortgagee who takes the legal estate in fee simple has the right, as owner of the inheritance, to the custody of the title deeds (a), and it is his duty to see that these are handed over to him; otherwise he may be postponed to a puisne incumbrancer who lends his money on the faith of the deeds (b).

But a mortgagee for a term has no such right: the title deeds go to him who has the inheritance in preference to a termor, however long the term (c); and if the security takes the form of the creation of a mortgage term, the mortgagee must obtain delivery

The mortgage gives the mortgagee a property in all the deeds relating to the mortgaged land (Newton v. Beck (1858), 3 H. & N. 220, 222). Hence a mortgagee with a good title, to whom a forged copy of a genuine deed has been delivered, can recover the genuine deed from a subsequent incumbrancer (ibid.). In Davies v. Vernon (1844), 6 Q. B. 443, 447, it was suggested that, though it was a mortgage in fee, yet if the deeds remained with the mortgagor, he might lawfully retain them in respect of his equity of redemption as against the mortgagee. This was said obiter, and was probably wrong. The decision was that the mortgagor could recover the deeds from a stranger. To avoid any such question it was formerly usual to insert in mortgages a special grant of the title deeds, and, if the dictum in Davies v. Vernon, supra, was right, this would still be necessary; see Sugden, Law of Vendors and Purchasers, 14th ed., p. 442. of the deeds at the time, or else take a covenant for delivery. He will not be able to enforce such delivery after the mortgage (d), unless there was an implied agreement that they should be delivered up (e).

SECT. 3.
As regards
Title Deeds.

373. When the property is in settlement, the legal tenant for life in possession is entitled to the deeds (f), and a mortgagee of the life estate has the same right; moreover, the life estate confers the right to them as against a mortgagee for a term, and when they have been brought into court for the purpose of raising portions by the creation of a mortgage term, they will, after the mortgage has been executed, be delivered out to the tenant for life (g).

374. As between co-owners, whoever of them obtains the deeds is entitled to hold them, subject to the right of the others to have the deeds produced (h); accordingly, a mortgagee of the interest of a co-owner is not entitled to the custody of the deeds as against another co-owner who has them in his possession (i).

375. As soon as the statutory power of sale has become exercisable, the mortgagee can demand and recover from any person, other than a person entitled in priority to himself, all the documents of title which a purchaser under the power of sale would be entitled to recover from him (j).

Right when

376. An equitable mortgagee by deposit of deeds (k) is entitled to retain the deeds until payment or tender of the amount due on his security, and till then the mortgagor has no direct claim to recover the deeds; but if a proper tender has been made and refused, the mortgagor can, in a redemption action or other suitable proceeding, obtain an order for delivery of the deeds on payment into court of a stated sum sufficient to cover principal, interest, and costs (l).

SECT. 3.
As regards
Title Deeds.

mortgagee with bad title.

Statutory liability.

Liability apart from statute.

377. A mortgagee who has taken a bad title and is compelled to deliver up the deeds can keep the mortgage deed, so as to be able to avail himself of the covenant for payment (m).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Liability for Production.

378. When the mortgage has been made after the 31st December, 1881, the original mortgagor, and any person deriving title under him or entitled to redeem the mortgage, so long as his right to redeem subsists, is entitled from time to time, at reasonable times, on his request and at his own cost, and on payment of the mortgagee's costs and expenses in this behalf, to inspect and make copies of or extracts from the documents of title relating to the mortgaged property in the custody or power of the mortgagee. This right cannot be excluded by contract (n).

Apart from the above statutory provision, a mortgagee, when the day fixed for redemption is passed, is not bound to produce the deeds to the mortgagor except on payment of all moneys secured by the mortgage (o); and he can refuse to produce the deeds in proceedings

Apparently, where the mortgagee has sub-mortgaged, he must arrange for production by the sub-mortgagee; see Rogers v. Rogers (1842), 6 Jur. 497. As to possession of documents for the purpose of discovery, see title DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES, Vol. XI., p. 85. Documents in the possession of a solicitor are under the control of his client (Fenwick v. Reed (1816), 1 Mer. 114; Bligh v. Berson (1819), 7 Price, 205, 207). A director of a mortgagor company cannot insist on inspection under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 16 (Burn v. London and South Wales Coal Co., [1890] W. N. 209). Where the mortgagor is bankrupt, the mortgagee can be required to produce the deeds in bankruptcy proceedings (Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 27; Re White, Ex parte Caldecott (1830), Mont. 55; Re Marks' Trust Deed (1866), 1 Ch. App. 429). Production of deeds on which an equitable lien is claimed can be required under the Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), s. 6 (Owen v. Nickson (1861), 7 Jur. (N. S.) 497). As to production of the deeds on a sale by the court, see Armstrong v. Dixon, [1911] 1 I. R. 435.

App. 497; see Senhouse v. Earl (1752), 2 Ves. Sen. 450; Sparke v. Montrion (1835), 1 Y. & C. (EX.) 103; Jones v. Jones (1853), Kay, Appendix, vi. Latimer v. Neate (1837), 4 Cl. & Fin. 570, H. L., which appears contra, was explained in Browne v. Lockhart, supra, and Glover v. Hall (1848), 2 Ph. 484, 490. Payment into court of the utmost amount due was not sufficient to give a right to production (Postlethwaite v. Blythe (1818), 2 Swan. 256; but see Bank of New South Wales v. O'Connor (1889), 14 App. Cas. 273, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 283); nor was the mortgagee bound to show the deeds to an intending purchaser (Postlethwaite v. Blythe, supra), or transferee (Damer v. Portarlington (Earl) (1846) 15 Sim. 380), unless the sale was being made in court (Livesey v. Harding (1838), 1 Beav. 343), or out of court (Anon. (1729), Mos. 246), with his consent. A cestui que trust who had mortgaged his interest to the trustee lost his ordinary right to production as against the trustee (Johnston v. Tucker (1847), 11 Jur. 382). The rule was treated as an instance of the general rule that a defendant is not bound to produce his title deeds, and it therefore extended to the mortgage deed itself (Beaumont v. Foster (1835), 5 L. J. (CH.) 4; Crisp v. Platel (1844), 8 Beav. 62; Dendy v. Cross (1848), 11 Beav. 91), and to a transfer (Gill v. Eyton (1843), 7 Beav. 155; Lewis v.

between the mortgagor and a third person (p), in which case secondary evidence of them can be given (q).

379. A tenant for life holds the deeds subject to liability to produce them for the inspection of remaindermen with a vested, but not with a contingent, interest; and the mortgagee from the tenant for life takes the deeds subject to the same liability (r); and generally the mortgagee of a partial interest in property, who obtains the deeds, is bound to produce them to other persons interested (s).

Davies (1853), 17 Jur. 253). The attempt in Patch v. Ward (1865), L. R. 1 Eq. 436, to revive the early right to production of the mortgage deed itself (2 Cases with Opinions of Counsel, 53; Anon. (1729), Mos. 246; Re White, Ex parte Caldecott (1830), Mont. 55, 59) was not approved (Carter v. Hubback (1876), 24 W. R. 354, C. A.), possibly because the mortgage deed belongs to the mortgagee; see Sheffield v. Eden (1878), 10 Ch. D. 291, C. A. The rule applied, notwithstanding that the mortgagor was contesting the validity of the mortgage (Crisp v. Platel (1844), 8 Beav. 62; Dendy v. Cross (1848), 11 Beav. 91); and it was not excluded by a mere allegation of fraud (Bassford v. Blakesley (1842), 6 Beav. 131; see Gill v. Eyton (1843), 7 Beav. 155); but in such a case production might be ordered if the circumstances under which the mortgage was obtained, or other circumstances, made this reasonable (Balch v. Symes (1823), Turn. & R. 87; Bassford v. Blakesley, supra; Costa Rica Republic v. Erlanger (1874), L. R. 19 Eq. 33, 45). The rule applied, notwithstanding that the mortgagee in his pleadings had craved leave to refer to the deeds (Howard v. Robinson (1859), 4 Drew. 522); and it extended to drafts and copies (Bycroft v. Sibel (1852), 1 W. R. 96); but not necessarily to vouchers (Gibson v. Hewett (1846), 9 Beav. 293; Freeman v. Butler (1863), 33 Beav. 289); and a mortgage deed might be ordered to be produced for inspection of an indorsee on it (Phillips v. Evans (1843), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 647). Where a trustee had mortgaged, and had then released the equity of redemption to the mortgagee, who had notice of the trust, the cestui que trust was entitled to production against the mortgagee (Smith v. Barnes (1865), L. R. 1 Eq. 65).

But though in general a mortgagee cannot be required to disclose the mortgagor's title, production may sometimes be ordered in favour of a third party in the absence of the mortgagor (Gough v. Offley (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 653); and, similarly, a mortgagor may be ordered to produce copies of deeds to a third party (Hercy v. Ferrers (1841), 4 Beav. 97). As to secondary evidence generally, see title EVIDENCE, Vol. XIII., p. 422.

(r) Noel v. Ward (1816), 1 Madd. 322; Davis v. Dysart (Earl) (1855), 20 Beav. 405. If the mortgage is paramount to the settlement, the remainderman cannot as such require production (Chichester v. Donegall (Marquis) (1870), 5 Ch. App. 497); but since he has a right to redeem (see p. 140, ante), he would have the statutory right to production (see p. 206, ante).

(s) In Lambert v. Rogers (1817), 2 Mer. 489, it was held that a mortgagee of the share of a co-owner was not bound to produce the deeds to another co-owner, since a mortgagee could not be compelled to disclose his mortgagor's title; but the other co-owner's rights cannot be prejudiced by the mortgage. On the principle stated in the text, the mortgagee of a lease, where there is no counterpart, is bound to produce it at the request of the lessor (Doe d. Morris v. Roe (1836), 1 M. & W. 207; Balls v. Margrave (1841), 4 Beav. 119).

the property (t), and if they have been lost he is justified in instituting an action for redemption (u) in order that the fact of the loss may be ascertained for the satisfaction of future purchasers. In such action the mortgagee is directed to give an indemnity against the consequences of the loss of the deeds, and he is liable to pay the costs (x); and the rule is the same if the mortgagor redeems in the mortgagee's foreclosure action (a). Where the deeds are known to be in the possession of a third person, the mortgagor will be allowed to bring an action to recover them at the mortgagee's expense (b). The mortgagor may also be entitled to compensation for the loss of the deeds (b).

redemption
through loss.

Interest will cease to run at the date when the mortgagor is ready to redeem if redemption is delayed through the loss of the deeds (c).

SECT. 4.—Right to Consolidate.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Nature.

General
principle.

381. A mortgagee, who holds several distinct mortgages under the same mortgagor, redeemable, not under the right of redemption expressly reserved by the mortgage deeds, but only by virtue of the equity of redemption arising after default in payment at the fixed day (d), may, within certain limits, and against certain persons who are entitled to redeem all or some of the mortgages, consolidate the mortgages, that is, treat them as one, and decline to be redeemed as to any unless he is redeemed as to all (e). This is an application of the maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity (f). After (t) Including copies; the mortgagee is not entitled to keep fair copies made at the mortgagor's expense, nor, it seems, copies made at his own expense (Re Wade and Thomas, Solicitors, (1881), 17 Ch. D. 348, 352).

(u) As to such an action, see pp. 149 et seq., ante.

(x) Middleton (Lord) v. Eliot (1847), 15 Sim. 531; James v. Rumsey (1879), 11 Ch. D. 398; Caldwell v. Matthews (1890), 62 L. T. 799. An inquiry as to the loss of the deeds will be directed (Smith v. Bicknell (1805), 3 Ves. & B. 51, n.; Stokoe v. Robson (1814), 3 Ves. & B. 51; Shelmardine v. Harrop (1821), Madd. & G. 39). For forms of indemnity, see Shelmardine v. Harrop, supra; James v. Rumsey, supra. The form, in case of difference, is settled in chambers; but unreasonable opposition by the mortgagor to the indemnity offered will, perhaps, make him liable for costs thereby occasioned; compare Macartney v. Graham (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 353. Where the mortgage deed itself has been destroyed, e.g., by fire, the mortgage may be confirmed; see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. V., p. 143.

(c) Middleton (Lord) v. Eliot, supra; James v. Rumsey, supra. The mortgagor cannot be sued for the debt if there is a danger of his not getting back his title deeds on payment (Schoole v. Sall (1803), 1 Sch. & Lef. 176); but it is otherwise if the deeds are in fact lost (Baskett v. Skeel (1863), 11 W. R. 1019).

the original day for redemption is past (g), the mortgagor can only redeem by the assistance of equity, and this assistance is given upon the terms that he shall pay the moneys due both in respect of the estate which he seeks to redeem and in respect of the other mortgaged estates (h).

382. It is, however, provided by statute (i) that a mortgagor seeking to redeem any one mortgage may do so without paying any money due under any separate mortgage made by him, or by any person through whom he claims, on property other than that comprised in the mortgage which he seeks to redeem. This applies where the mortgages, or one of them, are made after the 31st December, 1881 (k), but only if and so far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the mortgage deeds or one of them (l). Hence the mortgagee's right of consolidation can only arise where both the mortgages are prior to the date mentioned, or where the parties have themselves excluded the application of the statute (m).

SUB-SECT. 2.—When the Right Exists.

383. The right of consolidation requires that the mortgages shall have been originally made by the same mortgagor (n). Consequently it does not exist where one mortgage is by a sole mortgagor,

The courts of law recognised the doctrine in proceedings where the equity of redemption incidentally fell within their jurisdiction (Roe d. Kaye v. Soley (1770), 2 Wm. Bl. 726; see Marcon v. Bloxam (1856), 11 Exch. 586). But where two estates are subject to distinct mortgages, and a second mortgage is granted of both estates, the second mortgagee is not bound to redeem both the first mortgages if he wishes to redeem one (Pelly v. Wathen (1849), 7 Hare, 351, 365).

(k) Ibid., s. 17 (3). For a form of authority to consolidate, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. II., p. 489.

(l) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 17 (2). Where it is intended to exclude the statute, this is usually done by a clause expressly providing that the section shall not apply to the security; see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., p. 506; although a clause providing for the preservation of the right of consolidation is equally effective (Hughes v. Britannia Permanent Benefit Building Society, [1906] 2 Ch. 607, 611); but a clause which refers to mortgages only will not give a right to consolidate a vendor's lien with a mortgage (Re Pearce, [1909] 2 Ch. 492, 495, C. A.). A clause excluding the statute contained in the first of several mortgages of different properties is effectual to preserve the right of consolidation under all, although it is not contained in the subsequent mortgages (Re Salmon, Ex parte the Trustee, [1903] 1 K. B. 147); and, similarly, a clause in a subsequent mortgage is effective as to previous mortgages (Griffith v. Pound (1890), 45 Ch. D. 553).

(m) As to such exclusion not being a "reasonable provision," see pp. 75, 76, ante.

(n) And the right can be asserted only to the extent of the mortgagor's own interest in the properties; see Kensington (Lord) v. Bouverie (1854), 19

SECT. 4.

Right to Consolidate.

Although securities of different natures, and the other mortgage is by the same mortgagor jointly with another (o): and since, for the purpose of ascertaining the right of consolidation, the mortgagee is not entitled to look into any transactions between the mortgagor and third parties, a mortgage by a trustee cannot be consolidated with a mortgage by the cestui que trust (p); nor can a mortgage by a surety be consolidated with a mortgage given by the principal debtor for another debt (q).

But it is immaterial that the securities comprise properties of different natures, or that one or both are equitable mortgages; hence a mortgage of real estate can be consolidated with a mortgage of personal estate (r), and a legal mortgage can be consolidated with an equitable mortgage (s), and an equitable mortgage with another equitable mortgage (t).

384. It is not necessary that the securities should have been originally created in favour of the same mortgagee. The right of consolidation exists where mortgages given to different mortgagees subsequently become vested in the same person (a). But there must be an actual union of the securities in one person. A mortgage to one mortgagee will not be treated as consolidated with a mortgage to the same person and another on a joint account (b).

385. Both the securities which the mortgagee claims to consolidate must be in existence at the time when the claim is made.

Beav. 39. But, perhaps, the right exists where one mortgage is made by the mortgagor, and another by persons claiming by devolution from him on his death; see White v. Hillacre (1839), 3 Y. & C. (ex.) 597. As to the exercise of the right against an assignee of one of the equities of redemption, see pp. 212, 213, post.

(o) Jones v. Smith (1794), 2 Ves. 372, 376; see Marcon v. Bloxam (1856), 11 Exch. 586, 600. Hence a security given by a partner for his private debt cannot be consolidated with a security given by himself and the other partners for a partnership debt (Cummins v. Fletcher (1880), 14 Ch. D. 699, C. A., per JAMES, L.J., at p. 710, disagreeing with Beavor v. Luck, Beavor v. Lawson (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 537, 543). And a mortgage by a co-owner of his share of the estate cannot be consolidated with a mortgage of the entirety (Thornycroft v. Crockett (1848), 2 H. L. Cas. 239, 245, 255).

Thompson* (1858), 26 Beav. 637; Cracknall v. Janson (1879), 11 Ch. D. 1, C. A.; but as to bills of sale, see title BILLS OF SALE, Vol. III., p. 72.

(s) See Watts v. Symes, supra. The right to consolidate does not, like the right to tack, depend upon the possession of the legal estate (Neve v. Pennell, Hunt v. Neve (1863), 2 Hem. & M. 170, 183); but see dicta to the contrary in Jones v. Smith, supra, and White v. Hillacre, supra, at p. 609. As to tacking, see p. 330, post.

(t) Tweedale v. Tweedale (1857), 23 Beav. 341.

(a) Tweedale v. Tweedale, supra; Vint v. Padget (1858), 2 De G. & J. 611, C. A.; Selby v. Pomfret (1861), 3 De G. F. & J. 595; Jennings v. Jordan (1881), 6 App. Cas. 698, 700; Pledge v. White, [1896] A. C. 187. The contrary decision in Fosbrooke v. Walker (1832), 2 L. J. (CH.) 161, is clearly wrong. As to Selby v. Pomfret, supra, see Cummins v. Fletcher, supra, at p. 709.

Hence there is no right to apply a surplus on an existing mortgage to make good a debt secured by a mortgage which has ceased to exist by reason of the determination of its subject-matter, such as a life estate (c) or a lease (d).

But notwithstanding this rule, a mortgagee who has sold one of his securities and paid off the debt primarily charged on that security, is not thereby debarred from exercising the right of consolidation, and can apply the balance of the proceeds in payment of the debt owing on his other security (e); and where a mortgagee has given notice to pay off one mortgage with a view to acquiring the right to exercise his power of sale, he may nevertheless consolidate, and can refuse a tender of the money due under that mortgage alone (f).

386. Since the right of consolidation is equitable, it only arises after there has been default on all the securities in respect of which it is claimed; that is, the days fixed for redemption must have passed, so that the mortgagor has lost his legal right, and is bound to come into equity to redeem (g).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Against Whom the Mortgagee may Consolidate.

387. The right of consolidation is exercisable primarily against the mortgagor, and can be asserted in any proceeding in which the right of redemption comes in question: for this purpose foreclosure and redemption actions are on the same footing (h).

SECT. 4.
Right to Consolidate.

Consolidation after sale of one property.

(c) Re Gregson, Christison v. Bolam (1887), 36 Ch. D. 223. In such a case the debt formerly secured by mortgage has ceased to be a secured debt, and a mortgagee who has in his hands a surplus from a realised security cannot, as against other creditors, apply it in payment of a debt which has become a simple contract debt (Talbot v. Frere (1878), 9 Ch. D. 568; Re Gregson, Christison v. Bolam, supra, disagreeing with Spalding v. Thompson (1858), 26 Beav. 637; Re Haselfoot's Estate, Chauntler's Claim (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 327; and Re General Provident Assurance Co., Ex parte National Bank (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 507; see p. 333, post).

(d) Re Raggett, Ex parte Williams (1880), 16 Ch. D. 117, C. A. Similarly the doctrine of tacking does not apply where the mortgage to which it is claimed to tack a subsequent debt has been paid off (Brecon Corporation v. Seymour (1859), 26 Beav. 548). As to tacking, see p. 330, post. Where a mortgagee has been redeemed as to one mortgage by an incumbrancer against whom he could not consolidate he loses any right of consolidation he had against subsequent incumbrancers (Jennings v. Jordan (1881), 6 App. Cas. 698, 707). As to the persons against whom the mortgagee may consolidate, see the text, infra.

(h) Watts v. Symes (1851), 1 De G. M. & G. 240, 246, C. A.; Selby v. Pomfret (1861), 1 John. & H. 336, 338, affirmed on appeal, 3 De G. F. & J. 595, 598; see Tribourg v. Pomfret (Lord) (1773), cited Amb. 733; Re Loosemore, Ex parte Berridge (1843), 3 Mont. D. & De G. 464; and see p. 145, ante. Formerly the view was held that consolidation was confined to redemption suits (Holmes v. Turner (1843), 7 Hare, 367, n.; Smeathman v. Bray (1851), 15 Jur. 1051). It is not true, however, that the relative rights of mortgagor and mortgagee are, as stated in Du Vigier v. Lee (1843), 2 Hare, 326, 334,

SECT. 4.

Right to Consolidate.

Right exercisable against successors to unsevered equities of redemption.

388. So long as the equities of redemption are not severed, the right of consolidation can be asserted against successors in title to the mortgagor (i). For this purpose it is immaterial whether the mortgages were originally made to the same mortgagee, or whether they have merely become united in the same person (j); and in the latter case the right can be asserted even though the union of the mortgages has taken place after the change in the title to the equities of redemption (k), and with notice of such change of title (l). But the mortgages must both be prior to the change of title (m).

Where right affected by severance against equities of redemption.

389. Where the equities of redemption have been severed, whether by sale or further mortgage, or by settlement, voluntary or otherwise (n), the existence of the right of consolidation against the assignee of one equity of redemption depends on whether it had attached before the severance. This may be either because both mortgages were prior to the severance and were made to the same mortgagee (o), or because, though made to different mortgagees, they had become vested in the same person before the severance (p). In these cases the assignee of one mortgaged property, even though and Sober v. Kemp (1847), 6 Hare, 155, 160, for all purposes the same; and the period of limitation on arrears of interest varies according to the nature of the proceeding (Dingle v. Coppen, Coppen v. Dingle, [1899] 1 Ch. 726; see p. 145, ante, and title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., p. 101).

(j) See p. 210, ante.

(k) Thus the right of consolidation exists where the mortgages become united after the bankruptcy of the mortgagor (Selby v. Pomfret (1861), 3 De G. F. & J. 595; Re Salmon, Ex parte The Trustee, [1903] 1 K. B. 147), or after the sale or further mortgage of both the estates to the same person (Tweedale v. Tweedale (1857), 23 Beav. 341; Vint v. Padgett (1858), 2 De G. & J. 611, C. A.; Pledge v. White, [1896] A. C. 187; and see Bovey v. Skipworth (1671), 1 Cas. in Ch. 201), provided that the sale or further mortgage of the two estates is effected as one transaction (Pledge v. White, supra).

(n) See Re Walhampton Estate (1884), 26 Ch. D. 391, where it was held that the avoidance by a mortgage of a prior voluntary settlement under stat. (1584-5) 27 Eliz. c. 4 did not let in the right to consolidate such mortgage with a subsequent mortgage of other property; see now the Voluntary Conveyances Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 21), and title FRAUDULENT AND VOIDABLE CONVEYANCES, Vol. XV., p. 92.

he has given valuable consideration (q), and without notice of the mortgage on the other property (r), takes subject to the existing right of consolidation, and must submit to give effect to it (s). Hence he cannot redeem his own property without paying off the mortgage on the other property also (t); but if he does this, he is entitled to have both properties conveyed to him (a).

SECT. 4.
Right to Consolidate

Where, on the other hand, the right of consolidation has not attached at the date of severance, it does not attach subsequently. Thus the assignee of an equity of redemption does not become subject to consolidation by reason of a subsequent mortgage by the assignor of different property (b), or by reason of the subsequent union of mortgages which were created before the assignment in favour of different mortgagees (c). An express right of consolidation contained in the first mortgage does not enable the mortgagee to consolidate it with subsequent mortgages of other properties as against a second mortgagee of the first property, such subsequent mortgages being made after the date of the second mortgage of the first property and with notice of it (d).

Right to be effective must have attached at date of severance.

Similar considerations apply where the equities of redemption are severed by devise to different devisees. If the mortgages are not united until after the death of the testator, the right of consolidation does not arise (e).

Severance by devise.

Gray* (1875), 1 Ch. D. 491). Where there is a mortgage of leasehold property, A, first to X, and secondly to Y; subsequently a mortgage of property, B, to X; and then substituted mortgages to X and Y successively of a renewed lease of A, the substituted mortgages to X and Y are not treated as new mortgages, so as to give to X a right of consolidation against Y, especially if the priority of X for his first mortgage, and for a further advance to enable the new lease to be taken, is expressly reserved (Bird v. Wenn (1886), 33 Ch. D. 215).

Jordan*, supra, at pp. 701, 718, and must be taken to be overruled (Pledge v. White, [1896] A. C. 187, 195).

T. 641, the mortgagee was allowed to consolidate against a second mortgagee of one property taking with notice of an express covenant for consolidation; sed quære.

SECT. 4.

Right to Consolidate.

390. Where the mortgagee of two properties is entitled to a further charge on one, and there are intervening incumbrances on that property, the mortgagee cannot, after his first mortgage has been paid off out of that property exclusively, exercise his right of consolidation so as to throw his further charge on the other property and defeat the intervening incumbrancers' right to marshal (f).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Who may Exercise the Right.

Person in whom mortgages are united.

391. Where mortgages over distinct properties have been granted by the same mortgagor, the right of consolidation may be exercised by the person in whom the mortgages are united, whether he is the original mortgagee, or whether the mortgages or one of them have come to him by assignment or devolution (g). It is immaterial whether he holds on his own account or as trustee (h). But though he may consolidate notwithstanding that such union has taken place after the bankruptcy of the mortgagor (i), he cannot, to the prejudice of other creditors, consolidate, with a prior security held by him, a security for an advance taken after notice of insolvency (k).

An incumbrancer on the equity of redemption in one of two mortgaged estates, who pays off a mortgage on the other estate, becomes thereby an equitable assignee of that mortgage, and is entitled to consolidate what he so pays with his own debt (l).

Assignee of right takes subject to equities.

392. Since the right of consolidation is an equitable right, the ordinary incidents of equitable rights attach to it. Consequently the assignee of the mortgages stands in no better position than his assignor, and if by arrangement between the assignor and a subsequent incumbrancer the assignor has waived his right of consolidation, the right is not exercisable by the assignee (m).

(g) Jennings v. Jordan (1881), 6 App. Cas. 698, 700.

And if the first mortgagee has two debts, one secured on each property, and the puisne mortgagee of one property sells that property (the proceeds being insufficient to pay all the debts), and, in pursuance of the first mortgagee's claim to consolidate, pays off both the first mortgagee's debts out of the proceeds, the puisne mortgagee can treat the payment as made out of his own moneys and is entitled to consolidate the first mortgagee's debt on the unsold property with his own debt and recover it against a third property included in his security; inasmuch as, but for the first mortgagee's claim to consolidate, the puisne mortgagee would have received towards his own debt the proceeds which went to pay off the first mortgagee's debt on the unsold property; consequently he ranks as equitable assignee of the mortgage on the unsold property, and, thus having mortgages on two properties, he can consolidate (Cracknall v. Janson, supra).

(m) Bird v. Wenn (1886), 33 Ch. D. 215.

SECT. 5.—Accounts.

SECT. 5.
Accounts.

SUB-SECT. 1.—General Accounts between Mortgagor and Mortgagee.

393. The relation of mortgagor and mortgagee is terminated by redemption, foreclosure, or the accounting for the proceeds of realisation, and proceedings for any of these purposes involve the taking of an account between the mortgagor and mortgagee (n). In such account the mortgagor is debited with principal and interest (o), and also with the costs, charges and expenses incurred by the mortgagee in relation to the mortgage security (p). But he is not debited with rents and profits which he has received while allowed to continue in possession (q); nor, on the other hand, is he credited with any moneys which he has expended on the repair or improvement of the property (r). The mortgagor is credited with any sums which the mortgagee has received on account of the security (s), and the balance appearing to his debit is the Nature of general accounts, as between mortgagor and mortgagee.

(n) The ordinary form of judgment for foreclosure or redemption contains a direction that an account be taken of what is due to the mortgagee under his mortgage, and for the costs of the action (3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1895 (foreclosure); ibid., p. 1926 (redemption); see p. 153, ante, and pp. 231, 287, post). A judgment in an action to recover surplus proceeds of sale requires the like account, and also an account of the proceeds of sale (ibid., p. 1958). A suit involving an account against a mortgagee as such must be limited to the mortgage account (Pearse v. Hewitt (1835), 7 Sim. 471). Where an account is asked for, the mortgagee is not generally ordered to give particulars of his claim (see Augustinus v. Nerinckx (1880), 16 Ch. D. 13, C. A.; Blackie v. Osmaston (1884), 28 Ch. D. 119, C. A.); but this may be done if he is in effect claiming a definite sum (Kemp v. Goldberg (1887), 36 Ch. D. 505). As to the mortgagor's right to administer interrogatories to the mortgagee, see p. 153, ante; title DISCOVERY, INSPECTION, AND INTERROGATORIES, Vol. XI., pp. 98, 99. In each particular case it has to be considered whether any special inquiries or accounts are required (see p. 288, post), such as accounts of rents and profits against mortgagee in possession (see p. 219, post); as to costs, charges, and expenses (see pp. 231, 239, post); as to sums expended in lasting improvements (see pp. 154, 203, ante, and p. 240, post); as to deterioration of mortgaged property (see pp. 154, 202, ante); or as to sale at insufficient price (see p. 254, post). In foreclosure the prosecution of accounts and inquiries may be stayed until security is given if, owing to the sum due and the deficiency in the value of the property, they will be useless (Exchange and Hop Warehouses, Ltd. v. Association of Land Financiers (1886), 34 Ch. D. 195; see Taylor v. Mostyn (1883), 25 Ch. D. 48, C. A.). As to accounts of a mortgage of a partnership share, see p. 96, ante, and cases cited, ibid., notes (l), (m); 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., pp. 2043, 2173. As to the jurisdiction to order an account, see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 27, 28, 65, 66. sum at which he is entitled to redeem in a redemption action (t), or to redeem, so as to prevent foreclosure, in a foreclosure action (u); and if the property has been realised, the balance, if any, appearing to his credit is the sum which the mortgagee must pay over to him.

394. An account taken against a first mortgagee at the instance of a second mortgagee must be taken in all respects as though the mortgagor were taking it; and if the mortgagor would have an equity to exclude any item in the account, this equity can be asserted by the second mortgagee (a).

395. Where the mortgagor is indebted to the mortgagee on other accounts than the mortgage, the mortgagee is not at liberty to appropriate sums received by virtue of the mortgage to such other accounts. An incumbrancer is bound to apply what he receives by virtue of his security to that security (b). Moneys received by a mortgagee on a sale by the mortgagor in which he concurs are received by virtue of the security (c).

396. In general, the taking of the accounts in court is only necessary where a dispute has arisen, or where the mortgagee is seeking to foreclose. Accounts are usually taken and settled out of court, and this may be done from time to time or on the discharge of the mortgage.

397. A settled account (d) is prima facie binding on the parties to it; but in certain circumstances it will be reopened and taken again from the beginning, or the less drastic remedy may be allowed of giving leave to surcharge and falsify; that is, to take exception to particular omissions or entries (e).

A settled account will be reopened for fraud affecting the account generally or one or more items (f); and, in the absence of fraud, it (Bulstrode v. Bradley (1747), 3 Atk. 582). Where a foreclosure is reopened the mortgagee is not necessarily bound to account for rents and profits received since the foreclosure (Bird v. Gandy (1715), 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 251 (4); 7 Vin. Abr. 45 (20); see p. 298, post).

Goodwin* (1875), 1 Ch. D. 351, 358).

(e) "If any of the parties can show an omission for which credit ought to be given that is a surcharge; or if anything is inserted that is a wrong charge he is at liberty to show it, and that is falsification; but that must be by proof on his side" (Pitt v. Cholmondeley (1754), 2 Ves. Sen. 565, 566).

will be reopened if errors to a considerable extent in amount and in the number of the items are shown (g); or if the account is shown to be erroneous, and from the relative situation of the parties, or the manner in which the settlement took place, or the nature of the error proved, it appears that the settlement ought not to be taken advantage of by the accounting party (h). Thus where there is a fiduciary relation between the parties (i), or the relation of solicitor and client (j), the account is reopened more readily and on proof of smaller errors (k) than in other cases (l).

Liberty to surcharge and falsify will be given if a single definite error is proved (m), since the discovery of one error implies that others may be found (n).

(j) Lewes v. Morgan (1817), 5 Price, 42; Morgan v. Evans (1834), 3 Cl. & Fin. 159, H. L. An account settled between solicitor and client will not be reopened on a general allegation of error unless admitted by the solicitor (Matthews v. Wallwyn (1798), 4 Ves. 118, 125); there must either be special circumstances showing that the account ought to be opened, or allegation and proof of particular errors (Waters v. Taylor (1837), 2 My. & Cr. 526; Lawless v. Mansfield (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 557, 605, treated in Blagrove v. Routh (1856), 2 K. & J. 509, 517; 8 De G. M. & G. 620, 632, C. A., as going too far, but explained in Morgan v. Higgins (1859), 1 Giff. 270, 277; see Matthews v. Wallwyn, supra). But there will be liberty only to surcharge and falsify if this will meet the justice of the case (Cheese v. Keen, [1908] 1 Ch. 245). Where the relation of solicitor and client exists, the relief is not limited to six years; see title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., p. 166. As to the relation of solicitor and client, see, generally, title SOLICITORS.

(k) As to the grant of relief in a suitable case notwithstanding the smallness of the error, see Lewes v. Morgan, supra; Lawless v. Mansfield, supra; Cheese v. Keen, supra.

Goldwin* (1801), 5 Ves. 834, 837; (1804), 9 Ves. 254), or for personally collecting rents (Langstaffe v. Fenwick, Fenwick v. Langstaffe (1805), 10 Ves. 405), has been made, or compound interest has been charged without authority (Daniell v. Sinclair (1881), 6 App. Cas. 181, P. C.); compare Cheese v. Keen, supra, at p. 251, where a solicitor-mortgagee's account contained overcharges of interest and also profit costs which he was not entitled to charge. In such cases it is immaterial whether the mistake is of fact or of law (Roberts v. Kuffin (1741), 2 Atk. 112; Langstaffe v. Fenwick, Fenwick v. Langstaffe, supra; Daniell v. Sinclair, supra, at p. 190). Where no settled account is proved, but it is suggested that one may exist, liberty will be given to surcharge and falsify, if such should be the case, without allegation of specific errors (Kinsman v. Barker (1808), 14 Ves. 579; Lawless v. Mansfield, supra, at p. 604). But if a settled account is proved and no error shown, the court will not interfere (Endo v. Caleham (1831), You. 306; Lawless v. Mansfield, supra, at p. 605). A reservation of "errors excepted" does not prevent the account being a settled account (Johnson v. Curtis (1791), 3 Bro. C. C. 266).

SECT. 5.

Accounts.

Claim must be distinctly alleged and proved.

Setting off and correcting errors.

Persons bound by the account.

Persons not bound.

398. Whether it is desired to reopen the account, or only to surcharge and falsify, the ground on which relief is claimed must be distinctly alleged and proved as alleged (o). Where there are several accounts, errors in some will render all liable to be reopened or surcharged and falsified, if the relation subsisting between the parties, the character of the errors, and the connection of the accounts, lead to the inference that the errors proved in some cases may be expected to appear in all (p).

The accounting party cannot avoid liability by setting off against each other errors in different accounts (q). He can escape an order to surcharge and falsify by correcting particular errors before action (r), but not in the course of the action (a).

399. An account taken, whether in court or out of court, between the mortgagee and the person immediately interested in the equity of redemption is primâ facie binding on other persons interested. Thus an account between mortgagee and mortgagor binds a second mortgagee (b); and an account between a mortgagee and the tenant for life of the equity of redemption binds both vested and contingent remaindermen (c).

But persons who are not parties to the account are not bound if fraud or collusion and also particular errors are alleged and proved (d); and apart from fraud or collusion, proof of particular errors will entitle the absent party to an order to surcharge and falsify (e). An account taken between the mortgagee and a transferee of the mortgage does not bind the mortgagor (f). An account taken in court at the instance of a plaintiff is not binding as between co-defendants, unless the plaintiff cannot obtain the object of the action without determining the rights of the defendants among themselves (g); but, in an action by a second mortgagee against the mortgagor and the first mortgagee, if the first mort-

SECT. 5.
Accounts.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Accounts by Mortgagee in Possession.

400. In the absence of special direction, the account taken against a mortgagee in possession is a continuous debtor and creditor account (i). The mortgagee is debited with all sums which he has received or which he is to be treated as having received (k) by virtue of the mortgage, whether rents and profits, or accidental payments, such as fines or heriots, or proceeds of sale; and he is credited with the principal moneys, with interest accruing due from time to time, and with costs, charges and expenses, including all expenditure upon the mortgaged property which he is entitled to charge against it (l). The nature of the account requires that it shall be taken without limit (m); that is, from the commencement of the possession, or if there has already been a settled account, from such account (n).

Continuous

Period.

401. If the rents and other receipts from time to time derived from the mortgaged property are more than the interest, the mortgagee, when the account is taken continuously, does not apply the excess in reduction of principal, and so at the same time reduce the subsequent interest; he keeps it in hand, paying no interest on it, and thereby gains an incidental advantage. If, on the other hand, the rents and other receipts are less than the interest, the

(i) Wrigley v. Gill, [1905] 1 Ch. 241, 253. Where under a Welsh mortgage the mortgagee is to have the rents and profits in lieu of interest, an account can be ordered if these greatly exceed the interest (Talbot v. Braddil (1686), 1 Vern. 394; Fulthrope v. Foster (1687), 1 Vern. 476; see Alderson v. White (1857), 3 Jur. (N. S.) 1316); and see p. 88, ante. For a form, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. I., pp. 152, 153.

(k) As to the account being on the footing of wilful default, see p. 198, ante.

(l) See Thompson v. Hudson (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 497, 498; Union Bank of London v. Ingram (1880), 16 Ch. D. 53; Cockburn v. Edwards (1881), 18 Ch. D. 449, 456, C. A. In Thompson v. Hudson, supra, it was said that a third column was reserved for the principal debt, but if the whole account is presented as a debtor and creditor account, it is necessarily restricted to two columns. In fact, however, the order to account requires that the account shall be taken in a series of single column accounts:—(1) an account of what is due to the mortgagee for principal, interest and costs; (2) an account of moneys expended by the mortgagee in necessary repairs and lasting improvements, with, in the case of lasting improvements, interest from the date of outlay; (3) an account of rents and profits. The aggregate of accounts (1) and (2) are added together, and that of account (3) subtracted, and the balance is the amount due to the mortgagee (3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 957; Wrigley v. Gill, supra). For form of affidavit verifying the account, see Daniell's Chancery Forms, 5th ed., p. 773; and see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. I., p. 152. As to an account by a tenant by elegit, see title EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., p. 73.

SECT. 5.
Accounts.

deficiency means an accumulation of interest overdue, and this is a further debt owing by the mortgagor on which he pays no interest. The rents and receipts are not appropriated to interest separately, but go generally in reduction of principal and interest, and this method favours either mortgagee or mortgagor according to the state of the account (o).

Taking
rests.

402. So far as the continuous account favours the mortgagor, it is not interfered with. If the current excess of interest due over receipts were turned into capital and so made to bear interest, this would be to give compound interest against the mortgagor, which can only be done when the mortgage contract provides for compound interest (p). But so far as the continuous account favours the mortgagee, the court interferes in certain circumstances and deprives him of the advantage so gained by directing the account to be taken with rests (q); that is, when the receipts for the year or other period exceed the interest and current expenses, the surplus is credited in reduction of principal, and interest runs thenceforward only on the reduced amount (r).

rests after
of debts.

After the mortgage debt is thus satisfied, the effect of the rests is to make interest payable by the mortgagee. For each period in which there is an excess of receipts over expenses, there is a balance owing from the mortgagee to the mortgagor; and these balances carry compound interest, that is, the interest due for any period is added to the balance due at the end of the period, and the interest for the ensuing period is reckoned on the aggregate sum (s). The rate of

(o) See Union Bank of London v. Ingram (1880), 16 Ch. D. 53.

(p) See p. 116, ante, and p. 227, post.

(q) For directions to account with rests, see 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1956 (but Form 1 omits to state the period of the rests). Rests, it has been said, are only directed in the case of real estate (Robinson v. Cumming (1742), 2 Atk. 409, 410); but there seems no reason for this restriction. They may be directed where the mortgagee is charged with an occupation rent (Donovan v. Fricker (1821), Jac. 165; Wilson v. Metcalfe (1826), 1 Russ. 530; see p. 201, ante); but the mortgagee must be in possession as such, and not as tenant (Page v. Linwood (1837), 4 Cl. & Fin. 399, H. L.). Where rests have been directed in a redemption action (see p. 154, ante) which is abandoned, and a foreclosure action is subsequently brought, the accounts must be taken with rests, at any rate up to the date of the earlier order (Morris v. Islip (1855), 20 Beav. 654). Although rests are not directed, it may be necessary to find out from time to time whether the mortgagee has rents in hand sufficient to cover interest; where, for instance, this is required to avoid a claim for capitalisation of interest in arrear (Wrigley v. Gill, [1906] 1 Ch. 165, C. A.); and see p. 116, ante.

(r) This may be done either by taking a separate revenue account, and carrying the balance to the credit of principal, or by simply striking a balance in the ordinary account which includes principal (see note (l), p. 219, ante), the balance thus showing the reduced principal.

(s) As long as there is principal due, the rests may be made either from time to time, whenever the mortgagee has an excess of receipts over interest and expenses in hand, or at stated intervals. The former method is suitable if there are likely to be substantial sums in hand, and it has been ordered (Binnington v. Harwood (1825), Turn. & R. 477; see 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1956); but more usually the account is directed to be taken with yearly or half-yearly rests, and then it is only the periodical balance in the hands of the mortgagee which is struck off principal (Yates v.

interest is usually 4 per cent. per annum (t). If a mortgagee, who has not been in possession, has surplus sale moneys in hand, he is charged simple interest at the same rate (a).

SECT. 5.
Accounts.

403. The account is not taken with rests unless a special direction to that effect is inserted in the order (b), and such a direction is not inserted as a matter of course (c). A mortgagee is not bound to accept payment of his money by dribblets (d), and the direction is not given unless the mortgagee has impliedly elected to be paid in this manner, or has so acted as to forfeit his usual immunity. He impliedly elects to be paid by dribblets if he enters into possession when no interest is in arrear (e), and there are no special circumstances to account for his taking this step (f).

ordered.

mortgagee.

Hamblly (1742), 2 Atk. 360 (see the form of decree in this case, cited in Webber v. Hunt (1815), 1 Madd. 13, 14; see Wilson v. Chuer (1840), 3 Beav. 136; Thornycroft v. Crockett (1848), 2 H. L. Cas. 239, 256). In Binnington v. Harwood (1825), Turn. & R. 477, the decree combined both these methods, but they appear to be incompatible. When there is no longer any principal due, the direction for annual rests is equivalent to a direction that the mortgagee shall be charged with compound interest, and operates in the same way as in other cases where an accounting party—e.g., an executor—has money in hand (see Raphael v. Boehm (1805), 11 Ves. 92; (1807), 13 Ves. 407, 590; Heighington v. Grant (1840), 5 My. & Cr. 258; see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 324); but this may be made more explicit by a direction that, in making the periodic rests (except the first), the interest of each preceding balance shall be included in the new balance, so as to charge the mortgagee with compound interest (Cotham v. West (1839), 1 Beav. 380, 381; 2 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1160; Ashworth v. Lord (1887), 36 Ch. D. 545, 552; 2 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1160; 3 ibid., p. 1957). Under special circumstances the order may direct each receipt to carry interest from the time of receipt in addition to periodic rests (see Raphael v. Boehm, supra; Lloyd v. Jones (1842), 12 Sim. 491).

(t) Ashworth v. Lord, supra; see Quarrell v. Beckford (1816), 1 Madd. 269, 285; Wilson v. Metcalfe (1826), 1 Russ. 530, 537; Lewes v. Morgan (1829), 3 Y. & J. 394, 399; *Montgomery v. (b) Webber v. Hunt (1815), 1 Madd. 13; Donovan v. Fricker (1821), Jac. 165, 168. In Ireland the account is taken with yearly rests without special order, but rests are not made between the half-yearly days (Graham v. Walker (1847), 11 I. Eq. R. 415).

(c) Davis v. May (1815), 19 Ves. 383; Donovan v. Fricker, supra; Scholefield v. Ingham (1838), Coop. Pr. Cas. 477; see Neesom v. Clarke (1845), 4 Hare, 97, 105. It has been said that the account must be continuous if the mortgagee, as in a Welsh mortgage, is in possession under the terms of the contract (Alderson v. White (1857), 3 Jur. (N. S.) 1316, 1320). As to Welsh mortgages, see p. 87, ante.

(e) Nelson v. Booth, supra; Ashworth v. Lord, supra. As to the circumstances entitling the mortgagee to take possession, see pp. 189 et seq., ante.

(f) The question of interest being in arrear is not conclusive; all the circumstances must be taken into consideration (Horlock v. Smith (1844), 1 Coll. 287, 297).

SECT. 5.
Accounts.

Effect of setting up adverse title.

Effect of subsequent payment of arrears of interest.

Hence the account will usually be taken with rests if there was no interest in arrear when the mortgagee entered (g), but without rests if interest was in arrear (h). If, however, special burdens have been imposed upon him by the conduct of the mortgagor, rests will not be directed even though no interest was in arrear (i).

The mortgagee forfeits the immunities of an ordinary mortgagee if he unsuccessfully sets up a title as owner adverse to the mortgagor and denies his right to redeem, and he will be ordered to account with rests, although interest was in arrear when he took possession (k).

If interest was in arrear when the mortgagee took possession, so that he was not in the first instance liable to account with rests, he does not become liable so to account from the date when the arrears were paid off out of the rents (l). When, however, the mortgage has been satisfied, the mortgagee must thenceforward account with rests, and a direction to that effect may be given subsequently to the original order to account (m).

(g) Shephard v. Elliot (1819), 4 Madd. 254; Scholefield v. Ingham (1883), Coop. Pr. Cas. 477; Wilson v. Cluer (1840), 3 Beav. 136.

(h) Stephens v. Wellings (1835), 4 L. J. (CH.) 281; Wilson v. Cluer, supra; Finch v. Brown (1840), 3 Beav. 70; Nelson v. Booth (1858), 3 De G. & J. 119, 122; Scholefield v. Lockwood (No. 3) (1863), 32 Beav. 439; and for this purpose a half-year's arrear of interest is sufficient (Moore v. Painter (1842), 6 Jur. 903). Where bills for arrears of interest are current when the mortgagee takes possession and are dishonoured at maturity, the interest is in arrear all the time, and no rests will be directed (Dobson v. Land (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 575). Formerly it was considered that any considerable excess of receipts over interest was a ground for directing rests (Gould v. Tancred (1743), 2 Atk. 533; Donovan v. Fricker (1821), Jac. 165); and this was treated as correct in Carter v. James (1881), 29 W. R. 437; though rests were not directed where the excess was slight (Gould v. Tancred, supra; Donovan v. Fricker, supra; Scholefield v. Ingham, supra). But, apparently, mere excess of receipts is not sufficient to render the mortgagee liable to rests (Baldwin v. Lewis (1835), 4 L. J. (CH.) 113; see Nelson v. Booth, supra).

(i) Horlock v. Smith (1844), 1 Coll. 287, 297; and the mortgagee need not account with rests if he enters on leasehold premises to avoid a forfeiture (Patch v. Wild (1861), 30 Beav. 99).

(k) Incorporated Society v. Richards (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 258, 334; National Bank of Australasia v. United Hand-in-Hand and Band of Hope Co. (1879), 4 App. Cas. 391, 409, P. C.; Wrigley v. Gill, [1905] 1 Ch. 241, 254; see Montgomery v. Calland (1844), 14 Sim. 79; Douglas v. Culverwell (1862), 4 De G. F. & J. 20, C. A.

Lockwood* (No. 3), supra. But if, while the mortgagee is in possession under circumstances which do not subject him to account with rests an account is settled between the parties which shows that no interest is due, or that arrears of interest have been turned into principal, the mortgagee is thenceforward liable to account with rests (Wilson v. Cluer, supra). As to the arrears of interest recoverable by a mortgagee in possession, see p. 229, post.

(m) Wilson v. Metcalfe (1826), 1 Russ. 530; Wilson v. Cluer, supra; Montgomery v. Calland, supra; Ashworth v. Lord (1887), 36 Ch. D. 545; see Quarrell v. Beckford (1816), 1 Madd. 269. The direction is given at any time after the account shows that the mortgage is paid off, although not asked for originally (Wilson v. Metcalfe, supra); or the mortgagee may be charged with interest on moneys received from the times of receipt (Lloyd v. Jones (1842), 12 Sim. 491).

404. Where a sale of part of the property is effected, the net proceeds are applied first in payment of interest then due, and the surplus is carried to the credit of principal as at the date of receipt, so as to reduce the amount on which interest thenceforward runs; but no rest is made at the same time in the account of rents and profits. If the account is being taken without rests, the account of rents and profits will go on continuously as though there had been no special receipt of capital moneys; if the account is being taken with rests, the usual rest will be made at the next period (n).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Accounts of Principal and Interest.

406. The first account to be taken under a mortgage is the account of principal and interest. If there is any special matter affecting the amount at which the mortgagor or a person claiming under him is entitled to redeem, such as a valuation of the security in bankruptcy, this must be pleaded or otherwise brought to the attention of the court before the judgment directing the account is given, in which case an appropriate direction can be inserted. If this is not done, the question cannot be subsequently raised on taking the account (p). If the account for interest is not taken owing to an expected deficiency, and payments are ordered to be made on account of principal, this does not prevent the subsequent calculation of interest in the event of a surplus (q).

Special matters must be pleaded or set out.

407. Where a mortgage is given for a specific sum stated to be then advanced, the receipt of which is acknowledged by the mortgagor, the mortgage deed is prima facie evidence of the amount of the advance (r), and, accordingly, the principal debt is proved by production of the deed, with the receipt contained in the deed or indorsed on it (s); but the receipt is not conclusive, and the mortgagor is entitled to show by parol evidence that the sum named was not in fact advanced (t); and the burden of proving the advance

A transfer of a mortgage, reciting that a certain sum is due on the security, has been held to estop the transferee from subsequently having costs which were included taxed on an ordinary summons, although a contemporaneous receipt ended with "accounts hereafter to be adjusted" (Re Forsyth (1865), 11 Jur. strictly is on the mortgagee in certain cases, namely, where the mortgagee was at the time the mortgagor's solicitor or agent (u), or where there is evidence of pressure (v) or fraud (a).

408. The mortgagee may stipulate for a commission of an amount reasonable, having regard to the risk run (b); and if, on making the advance, he deducts this commission from the sum stated in the mortgage deed, and pays only the balance, the full sum so stated will be allowed as the principal debt in his account (c).

409. The security may be given to cover future advances, whether in addition to an immediate advance or not, or to cover a current account, or to cover present or future liabilities (d). In

The doctrine laid down in Re Edwards' Estate (1861), 11 L. Ch. R. 367, 369, that an onerous contract entered into as part of the mortgage transaction is presumed to be made under pressure, is not correct (Biggs v. Hoddinott, Hoddinott v. Biggs, supra); and see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 91, note (r): If the commission is not deducted at the time of the advance, it will be allowed subsequently in the accounts under the head of just allowances, provided that it is stipulated for in the mortgage contract, and that the bargain is deliberately entered into while the parties are on equal terms (Bucknell v. Vickery (1891), 64 L. T. 701, P. C.; The Benwell Tower (1895), 72 L. T. 664, 670); see note (c), p. 144, ante: Broad v. Selfe (1863), 11 W. R. 1036, and James v. Kerr (1889), 40 Ch. D. 449, 459, so far as to the contrary, appear not to be now law. An agreement, in consideration of a present advance, to pay a larger sum in the future is valid (Wallingford v. Mutual Society (1880), 5 App. Cas. 685, 702).

(d) A security for advances will generally, if the surrounding circumstances favour the construction, include past as well as future advances (Hibernian Bank v. Gilbert (1889), 23 L. R. Ir. 321); and a charge on a policy of insurance for notes cashed may cover the balance due at the mortgagor's death (Jones v. Consolidated Investment Assurance Co. (1858), 26 Beav. 256); but a security to cover liabilities of the mortgagor to the mortgagee refers only to direct liabilities; it does not include liability on a bill which the mortgagee has purchased (Calisher v. Forbes (1871), 7 Ch. App. 109, 114). A mortgage to a bank to cover debts due or growing due from the mortgagor covers his liability on bills drawn by him and accepted by a third party, which are then under discount with the bank, and are subsequently dishonoured (Merchants' Bank of London v. Maud (1870), 19 W. R. 657); and a mortgage of a public-house to brewers to cover debts due from the mortgagor or his assigns will cover the business debt of his devisee (Re Watts, Smith v. Watts (1882), 22 Ch. D. 5, C. A.). For forms of mortgages to secure further advances, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., pp. 519, 650; and to secure current accounts, see ibid., Vol. VIII., p. 608A. As to the right of a solicitor-mortgagee to add certain costs to his security, see p. 124, ante. As to further advances by an executor-mortgagee, see Re Gannon, Gannon v. Gannon, [1909] 1 I. R. 57, C. A.

these cases it is available up to the limit for which it is stamped (e), but sometimes an express limit on the amount recoverable under it is inserted, and, according to the construction of the deed, this may be a limit on principal only, leaving interest and outgoings to be recovered in addition (f), or it may be a limit on the aggregate sum recoverable, for principal, interest, and costs (g).

A mortgage for a specific sum may, by the agreement between the parties, be in fact a mortgage to secure a current account up to the limit of such sum, but the burden of proof is on the party who seeks to establish that it is a running security (h). The actual amount due on a mortgage to secure a current account, or a mortgage covering further advances, may be proved by evidence outside the deed or by receipts on the deed (i).

410. Primâ facie, in the case of a mortgage to secure a current account, unless there has been express appropriation by either party (k), sums paid by the mortgagor are applied in satisfaction of the items on the debit side in order, beginning with the earliest in date (l). But inasmuch as the security does not, as against a second mortgagee, include advances made after notice of the second mortgage (m), the result is that the mortgage becomes a mortgage for the fixed amount of the balance then outstanding, and subsequent payments will go to satisfy it, while subsequent advances will, as against the second mortgagee, be unsecured (n). The above rule is, however, not applied if the circumstances show that it was the intention of the mortgagee to exclude it (o).

implies an agreement to pay interest (g), and interest is allowed at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum (r). Where a security is given by way of indemnity, it will cover interest on sums paid by the guarantor (a).

Where the mortgage provides for interest up to the day fixed for payment, but not beyond, a contract for the continuance of the same rate of interest until payment is not implied (b), but subsequent interest will be given by way of damages for breach of contract (c), and if the original rate of interest is a reasonable and usual rate, it is adopted as a proper measure of damages for the subsequent delay (d). This rule applies both to proceedings on the covenant, and to accounts taken in redemption or foreclosure. In taking such accounts interest cannot be ascertained as damages, but it will be awarded on the same footing as consideration for allowing the loan to remain unpaid (e).

covenant merges in judgment.

412. Where the mortgage deed provides for payment of interest on the principal debt after default, and judgment for the principal debt is obtained, the mortgage debt is merged in the judgment, and if the covenant to pay interest was merely incidental to the covenant to pay the principal debt, the interest will no longer be recoverable under the covenant to pay interest, but interest at 4 per cent. is recoverable on the judgment (f). Hence the covenant frequently COUNTERCLAIM. In mortgage transactions "month" may mean calendar month (Hutton v. Brown, [1881] W. N. 116).

Staunton* (1861), 30 Beav. 52; and Re Every, Ex parte Hirtzel, Ex parte Hine (1858), 3 De G. & J. 464, C. A., 5 per cent was allowed.

(b) See p. 116, ante. But a stipulation in the mortgage that the mortgagor will not transfer the property until payment in full of principal and interest implies an agreement for the continuance of the original interest till payment (Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur Pal (1896), 12 T. L. R. 609, P. C.).

(c) See p. 116, ante; but, ordinarily, interest is not recoverable as damages for detention of a debt (London, Chatham and Dover Rail. Co. v. South Eastern Rail. Co., [1893] A. C. 429; see title MONEY AND MONEY-LENDING, p. 40, ante); where, as in mortgages, the debt is payable by virtue of a written instrument at a certain time, interest can be recovered under the statute; see ibid., p. 38.

(d) Cook v. Fowler (1874), L. R. 7 H. L. 27. On a mortgage of a ship the original interest of 10 per cent. has been allowed (Morgan v. Jones (1853), 8 Exch. 620); and in Gordillo v. Weguelin (1877), 5 Ch. D. 287, 303, C. A., it was said that the jury would be directed as a matter of law to find damages at the rate of the original interest, but this seems to be erroneous; see p. 116, ante.

(e) Wallington v. Cook (1878), 47 L. J. (CH.) 508 (where, in a 60 per cent. loan, interest at 5 per cent. was allowed subsequent to the day for payment). Re Roberts, Goodchap v. Roberts (1880), 14 Ch. D. 49, 52, C. A., Mellersh v. Brown (1890), 45 Ch. D. 225, 230, and, perhaps, the judgment of Lord DAVEY in Economic Life Assurance Society v. Usborne, [1902] A. C. 147, 154, suggest that full interest at the original rate will be allowed, but the procedure in Wallington v. Cook, supra, seems correct.

binds the mortgagor to pay interest at the agreed rate on the principal sum or any judgment recovered therefor (g).

SECT. 5.
Accounts.

413. The rule just stated applies only to claims for interest made against the mortgagor personally under his covenants for payment of principal and interest. The amount for the time being recoverable under such covenants is independent of the amount for which the mortgaged property is a security. The security stands for the amount of the principal and the full interest—that is, interest at the agreed rate—and in taking the accounts in redemption or foreclosure, or for purposes incident to the realisation of the security, it is immaterial that personal judgment has been obtained (h). Similarly, where the debt is secured by bond, the full interest can be recovered against the mortgaged property, though the principal and interest recoverable on the bond is limited to the amount of the penalty (i).

Rate of
recoverable in foreclosure or redemption.

414. The mortgagor can validly agree to pay compound interest; that is, he can agree that interest in arrear shall be capitalised and shall bear interest at the same rate as the original advance (k); but the mortgagee cannot charge compound interest save under an agreement to that effect (l). Such agreement may be either express, per FRY, L.J., at p. 355; Arbuthnot v. Bunsilall (1890), 62 L. T. 234; Economic Life Assurance Society v. Usborne, [1902] A. C. 147, 149. Similarly, where the mortgage does not provide for interest after default, only 4 per cent. is recoverable after judgment (Re European Central Rail. Co., Ex parte Oriental Financial Corporation (1876), 4 Ch. D. 33, C. A.; see title JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, Vol. XVIII., p. 209); but a county court judgment does not carry interest (R. v. Essex (County Court Judge) (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 704, C. A.). If the covenant is to pay interest on principal remaining unpaid, it ceases to be operative on the judgment being obtained, since the principal due under the covenant is merged in the judgment debt, and is no longer, so it has been said, unpaid (Re Sneyd, Ex parte Fewings (1883), 25 Ch. D. 338, 353, C. A.); if the covenant is to pay interest on the principal moneys remaining due on the security of the mortgage, the effect is different, and the covenant remains operative notwithstanding the judgment (Popple v. Sylvester (1882), 22 Ch. D. 98, where the action was to obtain personal payment, and not, as suggested in Re Sneyd, Ex parte Fewings, supra, at p. 345, to realise the security; see Economic Life Assurance Society v. Usborne, supra, at p. 152). As to the rate of interest on costs ordered in a redemption or foreclosure action to be added to the security, see p. 233, post.

(g) See Re Sneyd, Ex parte Fewings, supra, at p. 355; and after judgment a new agreement can be made continuing the old rate of interest (Re Agriculturist Cattle Insurance Co., Ex parte Hughes (1872), 4 Ch. D. 34, n., C. A.).

or implied from the nature of the dealings (m); where, for instance, the advances are made in the course of a trade or business in which compound interest is allowed (n). Thus, if the relation of banker and customer exists between mortgagee and mortgagor, and the mortgage is to secure a current account, the mortgagee is entitled to make up the account with yearly or half-yearly rests, and charge future interest on the aggregate balance of principal and interest appearing at each rest (o). But under a mortgage to a banker for a fixed sum the accounts must be kept on the footing of simple interest (p), unless otherwise agreed. An agreement to pay interest on arrears existing at a certain date will be inferred where interest has for a length of time been paid on an aggregate sum made up of the principal and those arrears (q).

Commission or fines on default of repayment by

415. A loan secured by mortgage may be made repayable by instalments of specified amount covering both principal and interest (r), and this is frequently done in the case of building society mortgages (s), and may be done in bills of sale (t). Additional sums, (Chambers v. Goldwin (1804), 9 Ves. 254, 271; Mainland v. Upjohn (1889), 41 Ch. D. 126, 136), though, upon interest falling due, the parties might agree to turn it into principal (Ossulston (Lord) v. Yarmouth (Lord) (1707), 2 Salk. 449; Thornhill v. Evans (1742), 2 Atk. 330, where interest charged on arrears at a higher rate than that reserved was not allowed); and, accordingly, accounts might be settled half-yearly on that principle (Ex parte Bevan (1803), 9 Ves. 223; Blackburn v. Warwick (1836), 2 Y. & C. (ex.) 92). But the mortgagee cannot turn interest into principal against a subsequent incumbrancer of whose incumbrance he has notice (Digby v. Craggs (1763), Amb. 612).

(m) A mere intimation by the mortgagee that he intends to charge compound interest is not enough; there must be assent by the mortgagor (Tompson v. Leith (1858), 4 Jur. (N. S.) 1091).

(n) Morgan v. Mather (1792), 2 Ves. 15, 20.

The ordinary rule that receipts are first to be appropriated to payment of interest does not apply to such an account (Parr's Banking Co. v. Yates, [1898] 2 Q. B. 460, C. A.). But when the account ceases to be a current account, and a final balance is struck, whether on the death of the customer, or the cessation of the bank's business, or otherwise, the balance carries only simple interest (Fergusson v. Fyffe (1841), 8 Cl. & Fin. 121, H. L.; Crosskill v. Bower, Bower v. Turner (1863), 32 Beav. 86; Williamson v. Williamson (1869), L. R. 7 Eq. 542). Similarly, where partnership accounts have been kept on the footing of yearly or half-yearly rests, this method ceases to be applicable on the dissolution of the partnership (Barfield v. Loughborough (1872), 8 Ch. App. 1, 7); see title PARTNERSHIP.

(p) Mosse v. Salt (1863), 32 Beav. 269; London Chartered Bank of Australia v. White (1879), 4 App. Cas. 413, 424, P. C.; though where the customer has settled accounts on the footing of compound interest, his executors may not be entitled to reopen them (Stewart v. Stewart (1891), 27 L. R. Ir. 351, 363). But a mortgage for a fixed sum may be in fact intended to cover a current account, and will so operate (Thomas v. Cooper, supra; see p. 225, ante).

whether under the name of commission (u), or fines (a), may be agreed to be paid in the event of instalments being in arrear, and these will be allowed against the mortgagor in the accounts (b). But interest on fines cannot be charged (c), unless, for instance, on the construction of the agreement, the fines are to be added to principal (d).

416. A tender of the amount due on the mortgage at a time when the mortgagee is bound to receive it stops interest from running if the mortgagor keeps the money ready to pay over to the mortgagee (e). But for this purpose there must be an actual tender (f). Interest

417. The statutory limitations on proceedings for the recovery of arrears of interest by a mortgagee of land are dealt with elsewhere (g). Time limit.

The mortgagor should pay the money into court if there are any proceedings pending in which this can be done; if he makes profit—as by placing the money on deposit—he must account for this to the mortgagee (Edmondson v. Copland, [1911] 2 Ch. 301, 310; compare Robarts v. Jefferys (1830), 8 L. J. (o. s.) (CH.) 137; R. S. C., Ord. 22, r. 3). A mortgagee is not entitled to interest if by his own default he delays payment off (see Thornton v. Court (1854), 3 De G. M. & G. 293, 301, C. A.); but unavoidable delay in revesting the property in the mortgagor is not such default (Webb v. Crosse, [1912] 1 Ch. 323). As to payment of six months' interest in lieu of notice, and the cases where this is excused, see pp. 147, 148, ante. As to interest being stopped on loss of title deeds, see p. 208, ante.

(f) See p. 148, ante; an expression of willingness is not sufficient (Bishop v. Church (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 371, 372; Garforth v. Bradley (1755), 2 Ves. Sen. 675, 678; Kinnaird v. Trollope (1889), 42 Ch. D. 610); and see Webb v. Crosse, supra. If the mortgagee fails to attend on the day fixed for payment in a redemption suit, a new day is appointed, and subsequent interest is not allowed (Hughes v. Williams (1853), Kay, Appendix, iv.); and see p. 153, ante.

(g) See title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., pp. 101, 102. There is no such limit in the case of a mortgage of personalty; see ibid., p. 173. But actions on the covenant are subject to the statutory bar; see ibid., p. 76.

remainderman. The mortgagee is not affected, and, unless he has allowed interest to remain unpaid by collusion with the remainderman or other misconduct, he can recover against the inheritance arrears which have accumulated during the life tenancy (i).

Overpayments and under-payments.

419. Where interest has been paid on a sum greater than that ultimately held to be charged on the property, the overpayment is not treated as paid in reduction of principal (k); and under special circumstances an overpayment of interest may be refunded to the mortgagor (l), or an underpayment made good to the mortgagee (m).

Capitalisation of interest on transfer, or on redemption by puisne
mortgagee.

420. Where at the time of the transfer of a mortgage there are arrears of interest due which the transferee pays to the transferor, he can add these to the principal so that thenceforth they will carry interest, if the transfer is made with the concurrence of the mortgagor, but not otherwise (n). But on redemption by a puisne incumbrancer, the aggregate amount which he pays for principal, interest and costs, carries interest against the persons subsequently entitled to redeem (o).

(1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 557). Subsequent rents during the life of a tenant for life are applicable to liquidate arrears during the same life tenancy, but he is not liable to make good arrears of a previous life tenancy (Caulfield v. Maguire (1845), 2 Jo. & Lat. 141, 160; Honywood v. Honwood, [1902] 1 Ch. 347). Where several estates are included in the same settlement, the tenant for life is bound, out of the whole rents and profits, to keep down the interest on charges on all the estates (Frewen v. Law Life Assurance Society, [1896] 2 Ch. 511; Honywood v. Honwood, supra).

(i) Aston v. Aston (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 264; Loftus v. Swift (1806), 2 Sch. & Lef. 642, 654; Roe v. Pogson (1816), 2 Madd. 457; Wrixon v. Vize (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 192, 202; Re Morley, Morley v. Saunders (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 594. The principle applies equally whether the mortgage is made before or after the estate is settled. The mortgagor cannot by putting the equity of redemption in settlement affect the rights of the mortgagee, and mere laches on the part of the mortgagee does not prejudice his claim against the remainderman (Wrixon v. Vize, supra; Hill v. Browne (1844), Drury temp. Sug. 426, 435). The remainderman has his remedy by proceedings to compel the tenant for life to keep down the interest (Kensington (Lord) v. Bouverie (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 557, 596; Makings v. Makings (1860), 1 De G. F. & J. 355, 358; but see Scholefield v. Lockwood (1863), 4 De G. J. & Sm. 22, 31, where it was said that no right arises to the remainderman till the death of the tenant for life). Similarly, all arrears of interest are chargeable by the first mortgagee as against a second mortgagee (Aston v. Aston, supra), unless the first mortgagee has been in possession and has allowed the mortgagor to have the rents without paying interest (Bentham v. Haincourt (1691), Prec. Ch. 30; Loftus v. Swift, supra, at p. 655).

Hitchman* (1690), 2 Vern. 135; Macclesfield (Earl) v. Fitton (1683), 1 Vern. 169. Originally the court appears to have allowed arrears of interest to be capitalised on a transfer whether the mortgagor concurred or not (Anon. (1675), 1 Cas. in Ch. 258; Gladwyn v. Hitchman, supra; see Cottrell v. Finney (1874), 9 Ch. App. 541, 548). In Anon. (1719), Bunb. 41, it was said that the mortgagor would be subject to capitalisation if the money had been called in, and he refused either to pay or to concur in the assignment.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Costs, Charges and Expenses.

SECT. 5.

Accounts.(i.) In General.

421. The mortgagee is entitled to be indemnified against all expense so long as he acts reasonably as mortgagee (p). Accordingly the account taken in a foreclosure action includes his costs of the action (q), unless he is specially deprived of them for misconduct (r), and he is allowed also all proper costs, charges, and expenses incurred by him in relation to the mortgage debt or mortgage security, including the costs of litigation properly undertaken by him (a). But all these items are allowed only as a condition of redeeming (b). There is no implied contract by the mortgagor to pay them, and they are not, in the absence of express agreement, recoverable against him personally (c).

Extent of mortgagee's right to indemnity.

(ii.) Costs of Foreclosure or Redemption Action.

422. The contract between mortgagor and mortgagee, as interpreted by the court, makes the mortgaged property a security for the costs properly incident to a suit for foreclosure or redemption; but the mortgagee will forfeit his right to costs if there is such inequitable conduct on his part as to amount to a violation or culpable neglect of duty under the mortgage contract, or if his conduct as mortgagee is otherwise improper (d). In such cases he may either be made to pay costs or be merely deprived of costs (e). An order for an account to be taken, including the mortgagee's taxed costs of the action, does not prevent an adverse order as to costs if reason for this subsequently appears (f).

As to the mortgagor's right to tax the mortgagee's solicitor's bill after payment in a foreclosure action of the sum claimed and a specified sum for costs, see Re Griffiths, Jones & Co. (1883), 50 L. If the mortgagee proceeds by writ when a summons is proper, the mortgagor will only have to pay the costs of an action by summons (Johnson v. Evans (1888), 60 L. T. 29; compare Barr v. Harding (1887), 36 W. R. 216; Brooking v. Skewis (1887), 58 L. T. 73; note (t), p. 152, ante).

SECT. 5.

Accounts.

When costs are in discretion of court.

423. The mortgagee's costs of suit are not, like ordinary costs, in the discretion of the court (g); and if a charge of misconduct is made against him and proved, and he is thereupon deprived of his costs or made to pay costs, he can appeal as of right (h); but if, notwithstanding the misconduct, he is allowed his costs, the mortgagor cannot appeal except by leave, since the costs are then in the discretion of the court (i).

Taxation.

424. Costs are taxed as between party and party (k), and are not in general payable by the mortgagor personally, but the mortgagee adds them to his security (l). Where a foreclosure action relates to two mortgages which the mortgagee is not entitled to consolidate, the costs are apportioned rateably between the two estates (m).

successive incum-
brancers.

425. Where there are successive incumbrancers the same rule prevails, and each incumbrancer adds his costs to his security (n), save that where a subsequent incumbrancer institutes proceedings, not in his own interest only, but to secure or to realise and (i) Charles v. Jones, supra; Heath v. Chinn (1908), 98 L. T. 855, 858. There can be no appeal as to costs which are in the discretion of the court, except by leave (Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 49); see title PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

A.; and the rule that the mortgagee is entitled to indemnity requires that he should have solicitor and client costs, and this was formerly allowed (Lomax v. Hyde (1690), 2 Vern. 185). Although foreclosure might be brought in the county court, the mortgagee will be entitled to the costs of an action in the High Court (Brown v. Rye (1874), L. R. 17 Eq. 343), unless the parties live near to each other (Simons v. McAdam (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 324; Crozier v. Dowsett (1885), 31 Ch. D. 67).

D. 215, 219; Pollock v. Lands Improvement Co. (1888), 37 Ch. D. 661, 668. Accordingly the costs are payable in the same priority as the debts (Barnes v. Racster (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 401, 403); compare Re Baldwin's Estate, [1900] 1 I. R. 15. But while in a priority suit the costs usually follow the mortgages, the court has a discretion, and can order one or other of the claimants to pay the costs if a case is made for it (Harpham v. Shacklock (1881), 19 Ch. D. 207, 215, C. A.). If a second mortgagee makes an unsuccessful claim to priority in the first mortgagee's foreclosure action, the first mortgagee will add his ordinary foreclosure costs to his security, and the second mortgagee will pay the extra costs occasioned by the claim (Northern Counties of England Fire Insurance Co. v. Whipp (1884), 26 Ch. D. 482, 496, C. A.).

distribute the mortgaged property (o), or to ascertain the priority of the incumbrancers (p), he is entitled to his costs, so far as incurred for these objects, as a first charge on the fund.

But a mortgagor or subsequent incumbrancer, who raises an untenable defence, must pay personally any costs so occasioned for which the mortgagee's security is insufficient (q), and a redemption action, if the mortgagor fails to redeem, is dismissed with costs to be paid by him personally (r).

426. After the mortgage has become absolute at law, the mortgagee is entitled to deal with the mortgaged property as owner, and if he settles or otherwise disposes of the mortgage, so that persons claiming under him become necessary parties to a redemption (s) or foreclosure (t) action, their costs also are payable out of the property (a). Where a sub-mortgagee is a necessary party, he has his costs against the mortgagee, and the mortgagee adds them to his own debt (b). But this rule only applies to costs due to persons claiming under the mortgagee. The mortgagee is not bound to pay, and add to his security, the costs of necessary parties claiming under the mortgagor, such as a trustee in bankruptcy (c) or an heir-at-law, even though an infant (d).

427. The mortgagee is not entitled to interest on costs of an ordinary redemption or foreclosure action; but if a special order is made whereby the costs are to be added to his security, they will then carry interest, and this will be at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, notwithstanding that a higher rate is reserved by the mortgagee (e).

SECT. 5.

Accounts.

How far mortgagee's costs have priority over costs of other parties.

428. The mortgagee's right to costs extends to the costs of an action in which his security is realised by sale (f); but his priority for his debt and costs over the costs of other parties depends on the object of the action. If the action is designed to give the mortgagee no benefit beyond the realisation of his security, or if the matter within the jurisdiction of the court is in effect the equity of redemption only (g), the mortgagee is entitled to priority over the costs of other parties; and the proceeds of sale will be paid to him so far as required for satisfaction of his principal, interest and costs, without deduction except of the expenses of sale (h). This is so notwithstanding that he consents to (i) or asks for (k) a sale. Similarly, when the mortgagee comes in under an administration judgment, and submits to have his rights determined, he will be entitled to principal, interest and costs out of the net proceeds of the property in priority to the costs of other parties (l).

Effect of institution of administration proceedings by mortgagee.

429. But where the mortgagee, instead of relying on his security only, institutes a suit for the administration of the mortgagor's

c. 110), ss. 17, 18, interest only runs on costs ordered to be paid by one party to the other, not on costs payable out of an estate (A.-G. v. Nethercote (1841), 11 Sim. 529); see title JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, Vol. XVIII., p. 209.

(f) Wade v. Ward (1859), 4 Drew. 602. An equitable mortgagee by deposit is entitled to costs, whether there was an accompanying memorandum or not (Connell v. Hardie (1839), 3 Y. & C. (EX.) 582; R. v. Chambers (1840), 4 Y. & C. (EX.) 54); though formerly he was not allowed the costs of establishing his right to a sale where there was no memorandum (Re Wells, Ex parte Brightens (1818), 1 Swan. 3; Ex parte Trew (1818), 3 Madd. 372; Re Evans, Ex parte Robinson (1832), 1 Deac. & Ch. 119), unless it had been dispensed with under a trade custom (Re Davies, Ex parte Moss (1849), 3 De G. & Sm. 599); and the distinction may have been revived by Re Gawan, Ex parte Barclay (1855), 5 De G. M. & G. 403, 417, C. A., either generally or in bankruptcy only.

(g) See Armstrong v. Storer (1852), 14 Beav. 535, 538. This is so in an administration suit if it becomes necessary to sell the property, but the mortgagee is not otherwise interested in the suit (Hepworth v. Heslop (1844), 3 Hare, 485; Wonham v. Machin (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 447; Hilliard v. Moriarty, [1894] 1 I. R. 316, C. A.).

(h) Since the mortgagee gets the benefit of the sale the expenses of sale are a first charge (Dighton v. Withers (1862), 31 Beav. 423; *Re Oriental Hotels Co., Perry v. A.); though, if he is a party to the proceedings, he must allow the costs of realisation to be first paid out of the proceeds of sale (Re Regent's Canal Ironworks Co., Ex parte Grissell (1875), 3 Ch. D. 411, 427, C. A.).

estate, he subjects himself to the ordinary rule in administration that the costs of all necessary and proper parties are a first charge upon the estate (m), and consequently these costs, including the expenses of sale, rank before the mortgage (n). But if the mortgagee institutes a suit to realise his security, and also for administration of the mortgagor's estate with a view to realising any deficiency out of the general estate, he is entitled, subject to the expenses of sale, to the entire produce of the mortgaged property towards payment of his debt and costs; and as regards the general assets, the costs of all parties will be paid in the first place as in an ordinary administration suit (o).

SECT. 5.
Accounts.

430. In the following cases the mortgagee will be ordered to pay costs, or, if there has been default also on the side of the mortgagor, he will be only deprived of costs :—

(1) If the mortgagor makes an unconditional tender of a sum sufficient to cover the amount secured by the mortgage, at a time when he is entitled to pay off the mortgage (p), and the mortgagee refuses to accept it, he must pay the costs of a redemption action thus made necessary (q). But, in the absence of a tender, he does not forfeit his right to costs merely by claiming more than is due to him (r), or by bringing before the court a question as to the amount due, even though he is unsuccessful in his contention (s): such a claim is not necessarily vexatious, so as to deprive the mortgagee of the benefit of the general rule (t).

Or the mortgagee, if he fails on part of his case, may be disallowed the costs of that part (Kinnaird v. Trollope (1889), 42 Ch. D. 610, 621). In order to throw the costs on the mortgagee, the mortgagor must make an actual tender (Gammon v. Stone (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 339), notwithstanding that there is a dispute on a question of law (Hodges v. Croydon Canal Co (1840), 3 Beav. 86); and, as to tender, see p. 149, ante.

SECT. 5.

Accounts.

(2) proceedings instituted when nothing due ;

(3) unsuccessful denial of mortgagor's right or untenable claim ;

(2) If the mortgagee commences foreclosure (a), or resists redemption (b) proceedings when there is nothing due to him, he will have to pay, or will be deprived of, costs. If he is paid off before the action is heard and carries it to a hearing, he will have his costs up to payment and will pay those incurred subsequently (c).

(3) If the mortgagee unsuccessfully denies or resists the mortgagor's right to redeem, whether on the ground that it has been extinguished (d), or that the conveyance was absolute (e), or otherwise (f), he is liable for the costs so occasioned (g). And he must pay the costs if, being first mortgagee, he sets up an unsuccessful claim to tack (h), or consolidate (i), or refuses to allow the mortgagor to redeem on the ground that a subsequent incumbrancer wishes to do so (k) or on any other ground involving an untenable claim on his part (l). But he is entitled to his costs so far as the action was necessary for redemption (m); and he will not be deprived of costs if a specific, but unsuccessful, charge of fraud is made against him (n).

If anything is due the mortgagee has his costs (Barlow v. Gains, supra; Cassidy v. Sullivan (1878), 1 L. R. Ir. 313); but if the mortgagee has gone into possession, he may be deprived of his costs for failing to render accounts when required to do so (Powell v. Trotter (1861), 1 Drew. & Sm. 388; Cassidy v. Sullivan, supra). As to the liability of a mortgagee in possession, see p. 198, ante.

(g) But usually the costs will not be payable to the mortgagor personally; they will be set off on his redeeming (Wheaton v. Graham (1857), 24 Beav. 483; Forbes v. Jackson (1882), 19 Ch. D. 615, 623).

(h) Lacey v. Ingle (1847), 2 Ph. 413, 424; Credland v. Potter (1874), 10 Ch. App. 8 (where, however, since there had been a want of caution on the part of the second mortgagee, the first mortgagee was only deprived of costs); Kinnaird v. Trollope (1889), 42 Ch. D. 610, 621 (where, also, the mortgagees were not allowed costs of their unsuccessful claim); see Forbes v. Jackson (1882), 19 Ch. D. 615, 622.

(where the mortgagee of real and personal estate insisted that the executrix of the mortgagor was only entitled to redeem the personal estate; such a contention was quite different from the case of a mortgagee taking a fair point; ibid., per COTTON, L.J., at p. 436); Heath v. Chinn (1908), 98 L. T. 855, 858. But the mortgagee is not deprived of his costs if he brings forward a case which is fairly open to argument (Bird v. Wenn (1886), 33 Ch. D. 215, 219; compare Tarn v. Turner (1888), 39 Ch. D. 456, 467, C. A.; Deeley v. Lloyd's Bank (No. 2) (1909), 53 Sol. Jo. 339).

(4) The mortgagee is bound, upon a proper tender being made to him, to execute a reconveyance to the mortgagor or other person entitled, but the draft must be previously submitted to his solicitor for approval, and the engrossment then left for execution. If this has been done, and the reconveyance is not ready to be handed over on the tender being made, the mortgagee loses his right to costs (o).

SECT. 5.
Accounts.

(4) default in delivery of reconveyance;

(5) Generally, the mortgagee will have to pay costs if his conduct has been unreasonable or oppressive; where, for example, he has withheld accounts (p); or the transaction is tainted with fraud (q); or only a small sum remains due to him and his conduct has been vexatious (r); or he attempts to get the estate into his own hands (s); and though the mortgagee obtains the general costs, he will not get costs occasioned by charges against the mortgagor of fraud or other misconduct which fail (t), or by unnecessary proceedings (u).

(5) unreasonable or vexatious conduct.

431. Where the mortgagee has sold the property, an action brought by the mortgagor for an account of surplus proceeds of sale is not within the rule as to costs of foreclosure and redemption actions (a), and the mortgagee will have to pay the costs if the action has been occasioned by his refusal to render accounts or by his understating the amount due from him (b).

Action for an account against mortgagee.

(iii.) Costs of Litigation relating to the Security.

432. The mortgagee is entitled to be allowed in his accounts all the costs properly incurred by him in ascertaining or defending his rights, so far, that is, as he acts reasonably with respect to such rights as his mortgage title gives him (c). In order that such costs may be included, they must be claimed at the hearing (d), and, if the claim is supported by proper evidence, an inquiry will be directed as to costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by the mortgagee in respect of his mortgage security, not being costs of the action (e).

Appeals.

The rules with respect to appeals as to costs of the action (f) do not apply to such costs, charges and expenses, and where they are allowed the mortgagor has a right of appeal (g).

Costs
allowed :—

433. The costs of litigation which are allowed include the following :—

(1) of defending title ;

(1) Costs incurred in asserting or defending the mortgagor's title to the mortgaged property (h), and in defending the mortgagee's title against the mortgagor and his successors in title (i) ; but not costs incurred in defending the mortgagee's title to the mortgage against a third person (j). Where the mortgagee has already received party and party costs, he is entitled to charge the deficiency below solicitor and client costs (k). But the proceedings must be reasonably undertaken : an equitable mortgagee cannot have the costs of proceedings which are only suitable for a legal mortgagee (l) ; and the proceedings must not fail through the neglect of the mortgagee (m).

when the account is to include more than principal, interest and costs of the action, a special case must be made (Bolingbroke v. Hinde (1884), 25 Ch. D. 795) ; save that costs, charges and expenses, which are expressly included in the security, are allowed without mention in the order as "just allowances" (Blackford v. Davis (1869), 4 Ch. App. 304) ; and also the expenses of recovering possession (see p. 239, post), and of necessary repairs and ordinary outgoings (see pp. 240 et seq., post).

(e) Merriman v. Bonney (1864), 12 W. R. 461 ; 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1964. This form gives the mortgagee all that he is entitled to, and additional words are not inserted (Rees v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1880), 14 Ch. D. 372 ; see Clark v. Hoskins (1868), 37 L. J. (CH.) 561, C. A.) ; and see p. 145, ante.

R. 744 ; and the costs of defending proceedings caused by the mortgagor claiming to dispose of the whole property when part did not belong to him, but not the costs of an appeal (Re Hofmann, Ex parte Carr (1879), 11 Ch. D. 62, C. A.) ; and see p. 186, ante. In a redemption action the costs of a pending foreclosure action must be provided for (Ainsworth v. Roe (1850), 14 Jur. 874).

(i) Ramsden v. Langley (1706), 2 Vern. 536 ; Samuel v. Jones (1862), 7 L. T. 760 ; see Clark v. Hoskins, supra, at p. 569 ; Re Baldwin's Estate, [1900] 1 I. R. 15.

(j) Parker v. Watkins (1859), John. 133 : "It is the ordinary case of anyone who has the misfortune to have dealings with a litigious person, who is unable to pay the costs occasioned by his conduct" (ibid., per Wood, V.-C., at p. 137). Similarly the mortgagee cannot charge the costs of defending an action of trespass brought by a third person (Owen v. Crouch (1857), 5 W. R. 545) ; and see p. 187, ante.

(k) Ramsden v. Langley, supra ; see Re Love, Hill v. Spurgeon (1885), 29 Ch. D. 348, C. A.

(l) Dryden v. Frost (1838), 3 My. & Cr. 670. So a mortgagee, who has sold under a contract which is unenforceable for misdescription, cannot charge the costs of a suit for specific performance (Peers v. Ceeley (1852), 15 Beav. 209).

(m) Burke v. O'Connor (1855), 4 I. Ch. R. 418, where an action for rent failed through being brought in the name of the wrong person.

(2) Costs incurred in obtaining possession of the mortgaged property. Thus the mortgagee is allowed expenses of taking possession (n), and the costs of an action to recover possession (o), of the mortgaged property, and these may be included in his account as “just allowances” without special mention in the order (p).

(3) Costs of recovering the mortgage debt. The mortgagee is allowed the costs of an action to recover the mortgage debt, whether brought against the mortgagor (q) or a surety, and notwithstanding that the action is unproductive through the insolvency of the surety (r); the costs incident to the dishonour of a bill or note (s); and costs of administration to a deceased mortgagor, if this is required for recovering the debt (t).

SECT. 5. Accounts.

- (2) of obtaining possession ;
(3) of recovering debt.

(iv.) Costs, Charges and Expenses Generally.

434. The mortgagee's costs, charges and expenses which he can add to his security do not, in the absence of special stipulation (a), include the costs of negotiating the loan and preparing the mortgage; for these the mortgagor is personally liable (b). They include the following (c):—

Costs, charges and expenses which may be added to security :—

(1) Costs of completing the security, such as the costs of obtaining a legal mortgage in pursuance of an agreement accompanying a mortgage by deposit of deeds, but not the costs of investigating the mortgagor's title for the purpose of such legal mortgage (d); and where the security is on a fund in court, and

(1) costs of completing security ;

(p) See Wilkes v. Saunion, supra, commenting on Horlock v. Smith, supra. Formerly the costs had to be expressly mentioned in the pleadings (Millar v. Major, supra; compare Ward v. Barton (1841), 11 Sim. 534).

(q) National Provincial Bank of England v. Games (1886), 31 Ch. D. 582, C. A. Lewis v. John (1838), 9 Sim. 366, contra, is overruled on this point, though it has been objected that such costs are not costs in relation to the mortgage security (Merriman v. Bonney (1864), 12 W. R. 461).

(r) Ellison v. Wright (1827), 3 Russ. 458. And it is the same where the contract of suretyship is subsequent to the mortgage (Sachs v. Ashby & Co. (1903), 88 L. T. 393).

(s) Aberdeen v. Chitty (1839), 3 Y. & C. (EX.) 379, 382.

(t) Ramsden v. Langley (1706), 2 Vern. 536; see Ward v. Barton, supra; and costs of administration necessary for enabling the mortgagee to enforce his rights against the property are allowed (Hunt v. Fownes (1803), 9 Ves. 70); but costs of administration incurred by the mortgagor's representative without the request of the mortgagee do not take priority to the mortgage (Saunders v. Dunman (1878), 7 Ch. D. 825).

(a) Where the mortgage is to cover “every sum advanced or paid by the mortgagee to, or to become owing to him by,” the mortgagor, this does not cover costs (Field v. Hopkins (1890), 44 Ch. D. 524, C. A.).

(b) Wales v. Carr, [1902] 1 Ch. 860; see Gregg v. Slater (1856), 22 Beav. 314. But under special circumstances they may be allowed, and then they include fees to counsel for settling the draft mortgage (Nicholson v. Jeyes (1853), 22 L. J. (CH.) 833, C. A.). As to the costs of the mortgage, see p. 123, ante.

(c) As to costs of reconveyance, see p. 317, post.

(d) National Provincial Bank of England v. Games (1886), 31 Ch. D. 582, C. A., including costs of correspondence as to the legal mortgage. Similarly, the costs of a surrender of copyholds are allowed (Pryce v. Bury (1854), the mortgagee is empowered by the mortgage to apply for a stop order, the costs of the application (e).

(2) Expenses of maintenance and improvement of the mortgaged property (f), such as caretaker's wages (g), the expenses of necessary repairs (h), and of permanent improvements properly undertaken (i), and payments to agricultural tenants (k). Expenses of repairs are allowed as "just allowances" without express mention in the order (l); but to obtain expenses of permanent improvements the mortgagee must allege and prove some expenditure of this nature, and then an inquiry as to money properly (m) laid out in lasting improvements will be directed (n). The mortgagee is also allowed extraordinary expenses incurred for the protection of the property, but the mortgagor should be informed of the outlay as soon as possible (o). A second mortgagee in possession is not entitled as King* (1799), 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1958; but not the costs of an order appointing trustees under the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), for the purpose of leasing the property (*Field v. (k) See Oxenham v. Ellis (1854), 18 Beav. 593, where payments for which the mortgagee was liable to an outgoing tenant were allowed after certificate and payment of the amount due. But in Barron v. Lancefield (1853), 17 Beav. 208, further expenses were not allowed after certificate. As to the mortgagee's liability to tenants, see Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 12, replacing Tenants Compensation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 57), s. 2; title AGRICULTURE, Vol. I., p. 263.

(l) Tipton Green Colliery Co. v. Tipton Moat Colliery Co. (1877), 7 Ch. D. 192; and see p. 154, ante. But repairs done without the written authority of mortgagees by a receiver (see p. 266, post) appointed by them under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), cannot be included in their account (White v. Metcalf, [1903] 2 Ch. 567).

Beckford* (1807), 14 Ves. 177; Scholefield v. Lockwood (1863), 11 W. R. 555; and as to objecting to the allowance, see Powell v. Trotter (1861), 1 Drew. & Sm. 388. To obtain an inquiry it is sufficient to give general proof of expenditure, and prima facie proof that it has been laid out in lasting improvements; but if the proof establishes that the works are improvements proper to be allowed, an account of moneys so laid out will be directed (Shepard v. Jones, supra). A similar direction may be given where an adverse possessor has to yield up possession (Pelley v. Bascombe (1863), 11 W. R. 766). When the mortgagor is seeking, not redemption, but an account of proceeds of sale, the mortgagee's right to an inquiry as to improvements is stronger, since he is of course entitled to the expenses to the extent that they have increased the selling value of the property (Shepard v. Jones, supra, at p. 478; Henderson v. Astwood, Astwood v. Cobbold, Cobbold v. Astwood, [1894] A. C. 150, 163, P. C.).

against the first mortgagee to a charge for moneys expended in preserving or permanently improving the property (p).

(3) Where a mortgagee has to account for profits, he is allowed all expenditure necessary for obtaining those profits (q); and if by the terms of the mortgage deed this expenditure is authorised and the mortgagor has covenanted to pay it, it can, in case of deficiency, be charged against the property (r), or allowed out of the proceeds of sale (q).

(4) When the mortgagee has redeemed the land tax, the mortgagor has the option of taking the benefit of the redemption and repaying the amount expended, or of letting the amount remain as a charge on the land (s). The mortgagee of copyholds can add to his mortgage any compensation or consideration money or expenses paid by him under the Copyhold Act, 1894 (t), in respect of enfranchisement.

(5) Under the statutory power already referred to (a), and so far as no contrary intention is expressed in the mortgage deed, the mortgagee is allowed the premiums in respect of fire insurance, with interest at the same rate as that fixed by the mortgage (a). Apart from power conferred by the terms of the mortgage or statute, the mortgagee cannot charge such premiums in his accounts (b), except when he is mortgagee in possession, and then the premiums fall under "just allowances" (c).

Where the security covers a life policy, the mortgagee is allowed premiums paid by him for keeping the policy on foot (d); and, generally, he will be allowed sums which are properly expended for the preservation of the mortgaged property, such as fines for the renewal of leases (e) and ground rent (j). But such advances follow the principal debt, and if the right to recover this is postponed, the right to recover salvage payments out of the property is also postponed (g).

(6) In the absence of special agreement a mortgagee is not entitled to any remuneration for his special trouble in relation to the mortgaged property, and hence, when he is in possession, he cannot charge for work done by himself in collection of rents and management (h); but he can employ a house or land agent or a bailiff at commission or a salary, where the work is so troublesome that in the ordinary course he would do this if the property were his own, and he is allowed the expense so incurred in his accounts (i). He can, however, stipulate for payment for his own work (k), and if the stipulation is free from any circumstances of oppression or unfair dealing, effect will be given to it (l). Where the mortgagee is a company, it may employ its own directors at remuneration to do work in connection with the property and charge this against the mortgagor in addition to its own agreed remuneration (m).

(k) Formerly such a stipulation was void as tending to oppression or usury, and as a collateral advantage (French v. Baron (1741), 2 Atk. 120; Scott v. Brest (1788), 2 Term Rep. 238; Chambers v. Standard Land Co., Ltd., [1911] 1 Ch. 618, C. A.), so far as the stipulation is confined to the continuance of the mortgage security (Browne v. Ryan, [1901] 2 I. R. 653, C. (7) The mortgagee is entitled to charge the expenses of any actual⁽ⁿ⁾ or attempted^(o) sale; but, upon the principle already stated^(p), he cannot charge remuneration for his personal services in connection with the sale^(q), unless this is expressly agreed with the mortgagor^(r). If the sale has been in effect conducted subject to the control of the court, the auctioneer's fees are allowed only on the court scale, though a higher scale might be reasonable on a sale out of court^(s).

(8) A transferee of a mortgage can add to his security the costs of the transfer, if the mortgagor has been required to pay the debt or if interest was in arrear; otherwise he cannot^(t).

Acceptance of a cheque for the deposit, which is dishonoured, is not negligence so as to deprive the mortgagee of his right to the expenses (Farrer v. Lacy, Hartland & Co., supra).

(q) Thus an auctioneer (Matthison v. Clarke (1854), 3 Drew. 3; Furber v. Cobb (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 494, 509, C. A.), or a broker-mortgagee (Arnold v. Garner (1847), 2 Ph. 231), cannot charge a commission for selling, though customary allowances to insurance brokers who were mortgagees have been sanctioned, if not objected to at the time by the mortgagor (Baring v. Stanton (1876), 3 Ch. D. 502, C. A.). Formerly, a solicitor-mortgagee could not charge profit costs for work done in connection with the mortgage, including the costs of a redemption or foreclosure action (Sclater v. Cottam (1857), 5 W. R. 744; Re Roberts (1889), 43 Ch. D. 52; Re Wallis, Ex parte Lickorish (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 176, C. A.; Stone v. Lickorish, [1891] 2 Ch. 363; Re Doody, Fisher v. Doody, Hibbert v. Lloyd, [1893] 1 Ch. 129, C. A.); nor could he charge for work done for himself and a co-mortgagee (ibid., at p. 140). This rule has been abolished as to solicitors by the Mortgagees Legal Costs Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 25), with regard to costs under judgments subsequent to the Act (Eyre v. Wynn-Mackenzie, [1896] 1 Ch. 135, C. A.; Day v. Kelland, [1900] 2 Ch. 745, C. A.; see pp. 124, 145, ante); but it continues in force as to other persons, though it does not extend, as held in Matthison v. Clarke, supra, to sales by a firm of which the mortgagee is member, provided that the mortgagee is, by agreement, excluded from sharing in the profits of the transaction, or that, if there is no agreement, his partnership share is not allowed to his co-partner (Re Doody, Fisher v. Doody, Hibbert v. Lloyd, supra, per STIRLING, J., at pp. 136, 137); and where the mortgagee's solicitor, who is also agent for the insurance office, pays the premiums and receives a commission from the office, the mortgagee is entitled to charge the full premiums (Leete v. Wallace (1888), 58 L. T. 577).

(r) Formerly such an agreement was void, as giving the mortgagee a collateral advantage (Leith v. Irvine (1833), 1 My. & K. 277; Broad v. Selve (1863), 11 W. R. 1036; James v. Kerr (1889), 40 Ch. D. 449, 459; Field v. Hopkins (1890), 44 Ch. D. 524, C. A., per KAY, J., at p. 530; The Benuell Tower (1895), 72 L. T. 664). This reason does not now exist, but the agreement will not be enforceable after the redemption of the mortgage (Broune v. Ryan, [1901] 2 I. R. 653, C. A.; see pp. 143, 144, ante).

allowed on outlays of a permanent nature, such as renewal fines (b), or expenses of lasting improvements (c), or redemption of land tax (d), or where there is no income to meet them, such as premiums of life policies (e); but not on the expense of ordinary repairs, where the mortgagee is in receipt of the rents and profits (f), unless, perhaps, where the expense exceeds the balance of rents after payment of interest (g).

Part VIII.—Remedies of Mortgagees.

SECT. 1.—General Right to Pursue Remedies Concurrently.

exercise
concurrently.

435. So soon as the mortgagor has made default (h) in payment of the mortgage debt, the mortgagee is entitled to pursue any or all of his remedies, subject, as regards the powers of sale and appointing a receiver, to the restrictions imposed by agreement or by statute, according as the powers are express or statutory. Hence the mortgagee can at the same time sue for payment on the covenant to pay principal and interest, for possession of the mortgaged estate, and for foreclosure (i), and can combine these claims in the same action (k); and until judgment nisi has been obtained in his foreclosure action he can exercise his power of sale (l).

(b) Manlove v. Bale and Bruton (1688), 2 Vern. 84; Iacon v. Mertins (1743), 3 Atk. 1, 4.

(c) Webb v. Rorke (1806), 2 Sch. & Lef. 661, 676; Quarrell v. Beckford (1807), 14 Ves. 177, 179; (1816), 1 Madd. 269, 281; see Procter v. Cooper (1700), Prec. Ch. 116; and cases cited from Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., in note (a), p. 243, ante.

(f) In the cases cited in note (a), p. 243, ante, interest on expenses of repairs was not allowed; but sometimes it has been allowed (Eyre v. Hughes (1876), 2 Ch. D. 148, 164; King v. Kitchener (1871), 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, p. 1958, C. A.; and see 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, p. 1978).

(g) See 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, p. 1978; see Wrigley v. Gill, [1906] 1 Ch. 165, 169, C. A., where the dictum that the allowance of interest on necessary repairs and lasting improvements was very unusual seems erroneous so far as it refers to lasting improvements.

(h) Where a day for payment is fixed by the mortgage deed, the default occurs when this day has elapsed without payment (see pp. 71, 147, ante); where no day is fixed, there is default when the money is not paid on demand (see Cases with Opinions of Counsel, Vol. II., p. 51).

(i) Lockhart v. Hardy (1846), 9 Beav. 349; Cockell v. Bacon (1852), 16 Beav. 158; Palmer v. Hendrie (1860), 27 Beav. 349, 351; see Burnell v. Martin (1780), 2 Doug. (K. B.) 417; Rees v. Parkinson (1795), 2 Anst. 497; Barker v. Smark (1840), 3 Beav. 64.

(k) Dymond v. Croft (1876), 3 Ch. D. 512, C. A.; Greenough v. Littler (1880), 15 Ch. D. 93; Farrer v. Lacy, Hartland & Co. (1885), 31 Ch. D. 42, C. A. Formerly the mortgagee sued at law on the covenant, and in equity for foreclosure (Farrer v. Lacy, Hartland & Co., supra, at p. 50). As to joining a claim for possession with the action for foreclosure, see p. 284, post.

(l) An order for foreclosure nisi only suspends the power of sale;

If the mortgagee realises part of the debt by his action on the covenant, or by sale of part of the property, he must give credit in the foreclosure action for the amount realised; and if, after foreclosure, he proceeds on the covenant, he reopens the foreclosure. A realisation of the whole debt gives the mortgagor an immediate right to reconveyance of the mortgaged property remaining unsold (m).

Right to

SECT. 2.—Sale.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Express Power of Sale.

436. So long as the equity of redemption remains vested in the mortgagor, the mortgagee cannot sell the property except under an express or implied power of sale, or under a statutory power, or with the concurrence of the mortgagor (n). It was usual to insert in mortgages executed before the 1st January, 1882 (o), an express power of sale, and this is still done where on account of special circumstances, or of the importance of the transaction, the intending mortgagee prefers not to rely on the statutory power. The ordinary express power (p) gives to the mortgagee, and every person for the time being entitled to give a discharge for the mortgage debt, power at any time after the day fixed for payment to sell either by public auction or private contract (q), and subject to special conditions as to title; and, if there are prior charges, to sell either subject to or free from such charges, and in the latter case to pay them off out of the purchase-money; and to execute assurances to the purchasers (r).

see p. 296, post. See as to remedies for local improvement charges, title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., p. 234; and land improvement charges, title LAND IMPROVEMENT, Vol. XVIII., p. 298.

(m) Lockhart v. Hardy (1846), 9 Beav. 349, 355; see p. 308, post. It follows that where there are collateral securities the mortgagee should realise these first, and then foreclose in respect of the balance of his debt (Dyson v. Morris (1842), 1 Hare, 413, 423).

(n) Where the mortgagor sells and obtains the concurrence of the mortgagee, a deposit paid to their common agent who absconds is well paid as between the mortgagee and the purchaser (Rowe v. May (1854), 18 Beav. 613); but the mortgagee cannot be charged with it by the mortgagor or by a subsequent incumbrancer (Barrow v. White (1862), 2 John. & H. 580). As to the appropriation of proceeds of sale received by the mortgagee, see p. 259, ante.

(o) See Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 1 (2). It was not till recent times that the insertion of a power of sale became a matter of course. In 1857 it was said not to be a universal practice (Clarke v. Royal Polytechnic (1857), 4 Drew. 26, 30). The insertion of the express power continued until 1882, notwithstanding the statutory power given by the Trustees and Mortgagees Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145) (Lord Cranworth's Act); see p. 247, post.

(p) See Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., p. 509. Formerly mortgages were frequently created by vesting the property in the mortgagee on trust for sale; see p. 118, ante.

(q) Where the power is to sell by public auction, a sale by private contract is invalid (Brouard v. Dumaresque (1841), 3 Moo. P. C. C. 457); but under a power to sell by public auction or private contract there is no need to offer the property at public auction first (Davey v. Durrant, Smith v. Durrant (1857), 1 De G. & J. 535, 560, C. A.).

(r) Where the power, instead of expressly authorising the mortgagee to

SECT. 2.

Sale.

Usual supplementary provisions.

Provision is usually made that the power shall not be exercised until a notice to pay off the mortgage debt has been given and default has been made for a specified time, or until interest for a specified time is in arrear(s), or until default is made under some other stipulation in the mortgage; and purchasers are usually protected from liability to see that the power has become exercisable. There are also further provisions enabling the mortgagee to give a receipt for the purchase-money, and declaring trusts of the proceeds of sale. The inclusion of a power of sale does not prejudice the mortgagee's right of foreclosure (t).

Paramount effect of power of sale.

437. The power of sale is paramount to any subsequent arrangement between the mortgagee and mortgagor for the management of the premises (a). It is not extinguished by an ineffectual attempt to exercise it (b); and though the mortgagee believes himself to be absolute owner, and sells as such, the sale can be supported as a sale under the power (c). The power, when duly exercised, extinguishes the mortgagor's equity of redemption, and he is thenceforth only interested in the surplus proceeds of sale (d).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Implied Power of Sale.

In mortgages of chattels and choses in action.

438. A mortgagee of personal chattels, when possession has been delivered to him (e), and a mortgagee of stocks and shares, including a mortgagee by deposit of the share certificates with a convey, contains a covenant by the mortgagor to execute the conveyance, this does not affect the purchaser, and he cannot insist on the mortgagor's concurrence (Clay v. Sharpe (1802), 18 Ves. 346, n.; Corder v. Morgan (1811), 18 Ves. 344).

(s) Previously to 1882 the periods were six months' default in payment of principal, or three months' interest in arrear (Cockburn v. Edwards (1881), 18 Ch. D. 449, 456, C. A.). In special cases the power is made exercisable at any time after default, but this is an unusual provision, and may be oppressive (Miller v. Cook (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 641, 647), and it should not be inserted in a mortgage by a client to his solicitor without explanation, unless, perhaps, in the case of a second mortgage (Cockburn v. Edwards, supra; Craddock v. Rogers (1884), 53 L. J. (CH.) 968). This rule, however, does not apply where the mortgage is to secure an existing debt for which the solicitor is pressing, or where the subject-matter of the mortgage is hazardous (Pooley's Trustee v. Whetham (1886), 33 Ch. D. 111, C. A.). Where the power is exercisable on default in payment of the debt on demand reasonable time must be allowed to the mortgagor to comply with the demand (Rogers v. Mutton (1862), 7 H. & N. 733; compare Massey v. Sladen (1868), L. R. 4 Exch. 13; and see p. 114, ante). Costs improperly obtained by a solicitor-mortgagee under a threat of selling can be recovered as paid under duress (Close v. Phipps (1844), 7 Man. & G. 586); and see title SOLICITORS.

(t) See Slade v. Rigg (1843), 3 Hare, 35.

(a) Thus a receiver appointed by a subsequent deed must join in a conveyance to a purchaser if this is necessary for the purchaser's title (King v. Heenan (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 890, C. A.).

Sale.

blank transfer (f), has, in the absence of an express power of sale, an implied power to sell the mortgaged property, where a day for payment is fixed by the mortgage, at any time after default, and, where no day for payment is fixed, after reasonable notice has been given to the mortgagor, and default made in payment in pursuance of such notice (g). The notice, in addition to fixing a day for payment, should intimate that in default the mortgagee will sell (h). In the case of shares, a month's or perhaps a fortnight's notice is reasonable (i). The mortgagee does not prejudice his implied power of sale by claiming more than is due to him (k); but he refuses at his own risk a tender of the amount actually due (l).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Statutory Power of Sale.

439. Where any principal money is secured or charged by a deed made after the 28th August, 1860, and before the 1st January, 1882, on hereditaments of any tenure or on any interest therein, the mortgagee has (m) a statutory power to sell or concur in selling the whole or any part of the property by public auction or private contract (n). The power arises at the end of one year from the time when the principal money is payable according to the terms of the deed, or when interest is in arrear for six months, or on any omission to pay insurance premiums which the mortgagor ought to pay (n), but is not exercisable till after six months' notice in writing has been given to the mortgagor (o). The purchase-money is

(ss. 11—30) by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 71 (1). The remainder of this Act (Parts I. and IV.) was repealed by the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 64; but the repeal effected by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), does not affect the "operation, effect, or conveyance" of any instrument executed before the 1st January, 1882 (but after the 28th August, 1860), and hence the statutory power of sale under the Trustees and Mortgagees Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145), still applies to such instruments (Re Solomon and Meagher's Contract (1889), 40 Ch. D. 508). The power of sale is confined to mortgages or charges made to secure loans or debts (Trustees and Mortgagees Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145), s. 24), and may be excluded or varied by the mortgage deed (ibid., s. 32). applicable in the following order:—expenses of sale; interest and costs of the mortgagee; principal; residue to the mortgagor (p).

The mortgagee has power to assure by deed, to the purchaser, the property sold for all the estate and interest therein which the mortgagor on creating the mortgage had power to dispose of, except that, as regards copyholds, the deed only passes the beneficial interest (q); and he has power to call for the title deeds, and if the legal estate is outstanding in a trustee for the mortgagor, either the mortgagee or the purchaser can call for a conveyance of it (r). By the terms of the statute the power is confined to mortgages of real or leasehold property (s).

Deeds since
ber, 1881.

440. Where the mortgage is made since the 31st December, 1881, a statutory power of sale is also conferred (t). The mortgage must be made by deed, but, subject to this, the power applies to any mortgage or charge, whether legal or equitable, on real or personal property, or any estate or interest therein, or any chose in action (u), except certain bills of sale (a), and except debentures upon a public undertaking (b). The power authorises the mortgagee, when the mortgage money has become due, to sell, or to concur with any other person in selling, the mortgaged property, or any part thereof, by public auction or private contract, subject to such conditions of title as he thinks fit (c), and to convey the property for such estate and interest therein as is the subject of the mortgage (d), except that in the case of copyhold or customary

(q) Ibid., s. 15. Hence a mortgagee of leaseholds by sub-demise can convey the entire residue of the term (Hiatt v. Hillman (1871), 19 W. R. 694); and an equitable mortgagee in fee from a mortgagor who had the legal estate can convey the legal estate (Re Solomon and Meagher's Contract (1889), 40 Ch. D. 508).

A., suggests that the exclusion is limited as stated in the text.

(c) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 19 (1). As to the restrictions on the exercise of the power, see p. 251, post.

(d) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 21 (1). Thus the power to convey is not so wide as under the Trustees and Mortgagees Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145) (see note (q), supra), and an equitable mortgagee cannot convey the legal estate vested in the mortgagor (Re Hodson and Howes' Contract (1887), 35 Ch. D. 668, C. A.). This can be provided for by conferring on the mortgagee a power of attorney to convey the legal estate; and, as regards the nominal reversion upon a mortgage of leaseholds by sub-demise, it is frequently provided for, either by such a power, or by a declaration of trust by the mortgagor land the legal right to admittance does not pass by the deed unless the deed is, by law or custom, otherwise sufficient for this purpose (e). The power of sale does not affect the right of foreclosure (f); it may be varied or extended by the mortgage deed, and it applies to the mortgage only so far as a contrary intention is not expressed therein (g).

SECT. 2.
Sale.

441. When land is registered (h), the registered proprietor of a registered charge on it may, under the power of sale referred to in the preceding paragraph, sell and transfer the land, or any part of it, in the same manner as if he were the registered proprietor of the land (i). Power of registered proprietor of registered charge.

442. A registered mortgagee of a ship or a share therein has power absolutely to dispose of the ship or share and to give effectual receipts for the purchase-money; but a subsequent mortgagee cannot, except under the order of a court of competent jurisdiction, exercise this power without the concurrence of every prior mortgagee (j). Power of registered mortgagee of ship.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Who may Exercise the Power.

443. An express power of sale is exercisable only by the persons who are designated for that purpose by the power (k). Formerly the power was conferred on the mortgagee, his heirs and assigns, and could be exercised by his transferees, or, after his death, by his heirs or devisees (l); and a power so given is now Persons who can exercise power.

with a power for the mortgagee to appoint a new trustee of the reversion (London and County Banking Co. v. Goddard, [1897] 1 Ch. 642); see p. 127, ante. (h) Under the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87) and 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65).

(i) Under the Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 27, this power existed only where the charge was with a power of sale. By the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 9 (2), the statutory power is applied to registered charges; but, apart from this, it would apply to them on the ground that they are now made by deed (Land Transfer Rules, 1903, r. 107). Under the Land Registry Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 53), s. 34, the purchaser might remove the land from the register without the consent of the mortgagor (Re Winter (1873), L. R. 15 Eq. 156); and see, further, p. 85, ante. As to removal from the register under the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87) and 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), and as to registration of title generally, see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL.

exercisable, where the mortgagee has died since the 31st December, 1881, by his personal representatives (m); but a power not referring to "assigns" was not exercisable by transferees (n) or devisees (o), and an express power conferred on a mortgagee without mention of "heirs" is not even now exercisable by his personal representatives (p).

Practice with regard to express power.

Since the 31st December, 1881, it has been the practice, if an express power of sale is inserted in a mortgage, to confer such power either on the executors, administrators and assigns of the mortgagee, or generally upon every person for the time being entitled to receive and give a discharge for the mortgage money (q), and then the power is exercisable, if the mortgagee transfers the mortgage, by the transferee, and otherwise by the mortgagee's personal representatives after his death. But if the word "assigns" is omitted and no words are inserted authorising the exercise of the power by the persons for the time being entitled to the mortgage money, the rule that the power is not exercisable by transferees still prevails (r).

Joint mortgagees.

A power of sale in a mortgage to two mortgagees, who are expressed to advance the money on a joint account (s), is exercisable by the survivor (t), but a power of sale in a mortgage to partners is not exercisable by one unless it is so expressed in the mortgage (u).

Devolution of statutory powers.

444. The statutory power of sale under Lord Cranworth's Act (a) is exercisable by the person to whom the principal money is for the time being payable (b). The power under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (c), is exercisable by any person for the time being entitled to receive and give a discharge for the purchase-money (d); that is, by persons who are either conferred on the personal representatives, the concurrence of the heir-at-law to convey the legal estate was necessary; see Saloway v. Strawbridge (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 594, C. A.

(r) Hence a power in a building society's mortgage, conferred on the trustees of the society for the time being, is not exercisable by a transferee of the mortgage, even assuming the transfer to be otherwise effectual (Re Rumney and Smith, [1897] 2 Ch. 351, C. A.). As to the exercise of the power where a building society is being wound up, see Re Ebsworth and Tidy's Contract (1889), 42 Ch. D. 23, C. A.

SECT. 2.
Sale.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Conditions of Exercise of Power.

445. The time when the power arises is fixed in the manner already stated (f), but restrictions are placed on the time when it is exercisable. The power under Lord Cranworth's Act (g) is not exercisable till after six months' notice in writing (h). The power under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (i), is not exercisable until either (i.) notice requiring payment of the mortgage money has been served on the mortgagor, and default has been made in payment thereof, or of part thereof, for three months after such service; or (ii.) some interest is in arrear for two months (j); or (iii.) there has been a breach of some provision in the mortgage deed or in the statute on the part of the mortgagor, or of some person concurring in making the mortgage, to be observed or performed, other than the covenant for payment of principal or interest (i).

Restrictions on exercise of statutory powers.

The restrictions in either case may, however, be negatived or varied (k). An express power of sale is usually subject to similar restrictions (l).

446. The notice under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (m), requiring payment of the mortgage money, must be in writing.

Notice under and Law of Property Act,

It is sufficient although only addressed to the mortgagor by that designation without his name, or generally to the persons interested without any name, and notwithstanding that any person to be affected is absent, under disability, unborn, or unascertained (n).

(j) It is sufficient if an instalment which includes interest is in arrear for two months (Walsh v. Derrick (1903), 19 T. L. R. 219, C. A.).

(k) See note (m), p. 247, ante, and p. 249, ante. The power under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), can be made immediate by providing that the mortgagee shall have the statutory power, but without the restrictions imposed by ibid., s. 20, as to which see the text, supra. Where in a bank mortgage the power was to be exercisable on default in payment of the balance due on current account for one month after the closing of the account, and the account was closed by a notice of insolvency, the month ran from the receipt of the notice (Berry v. Halifax Commercial Banking Co., Ltd., [1901] 1 Ch. 188).

(n) Ibid. And under an express power of sale, where the notice is to be given to the mortgagor, his heirs and assigns, without a proviso referring to disability, a notice to the infant heir of the mortgagor is good (Tracey v.

SECT. 2.

Sale.

Sufficient service.Persons to be served.Form of notice.

It is sufficiently served if left at the last known place of abode or business in the United Kingdom of the mortgagor (o), or if affixed or left for him on the land or any house or building comprised in the mortgage (p); or if sent by post in a registered letter addressed to the mortgagor at his place of abode, business, office, or counting house, and is not returned undelivered through the Post Office (q).

Where there are several mortgagors it is sufficient if the notice is served on one of them (r). Where the mortgagor is dead it should be served on the person entitled to redeem (s). Where there are subsequent incumbrancers, it may be that it is sufficient to serve only the mortgagor, but the first subsequent incumbrancer should also be served (t).

447. The notice may be in the form of a demand for immediate payment, with an intimation that if the money is not paid before the expiration of three calendar months from the date of service the mortgagee will proceed to sell (u); but it is equally effectual if it is in

Lawrence (1854), 2 Drew. 403; as to lunacy, compare Robertson v. Lockie (1846), 10 Jur. 533. Where an express power requires notice to be given to the mortgagor, his executors, or administrators, it cannot be given, and the power is not exercisable, if the mortgagor dies intestate and no administrator is appointed (Parkinson v. Hanbury (1860), 1 Drew. & Sm. 143; (1865), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 450, C. A.; (1867), L. R. 2 H. L. 1).

(o) Under a similar provision in an express power it is sufficient to fix the notice on the door of the mortgagor's last known place of abode (Major v. Ward (1847), 5 Hare, 598).

(p) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 67 (3).

(r) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 20.

(s) See ibid., s. 2 (vi.). Service will be on the executors, or, if they have assented to a devise, either on them or on the devisee; and in case of intestacy, on the administrator until (as to freeholds) he has conveyed to the heir-at-law, and then either on the administrator or the heir-at-law (Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), ss. 1 (1), 3 (1)). Similarly, where an express power provides for notice to the mortgagor, his heirs, executors, or administrators, or any of them, notice to the executors alone is sufficient (Gill v. Newton (1866), 14 W. R. 490, C. A.).

(t) The term "mortgagor" in the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 20, includes any person deriving title under the original mortgagor; thus the persons to whom notice may be given appear to be the mortgagor and all the incumbrancers, and if these are treated as "several mortgagors" notice to any of them is sufficient; see Wolstenholme's Conveyancing and Settled Land Acts, 9th ed., p. 77. On the other hand, as long as the mortgagor retains an equity of redemption, it may be that he remains sole mortgagor for the purposes of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 20, so that notice to him is necessary and sufficient; see Hood and Challis, Conveyancing, Settled Land, and Trustee Acts, 7th ed., p. 90. When an express power of sale provides for notice to the mortgagor, or his assigns, notice to a second mortgagee is necessary, though it is doubtful whether it must also be given to the mortgagor (Hoole v. Smith (1881), 17 Ch. D. 434). Hence it seems proper to give the notice, as stated in the text, supra, to the mortgagor and the first of the subsequent incumbrancers. Where an express power is stated to be exercisable immediately, with a proviso that it is not to be exercised until default under the covenant for payment, a second mortgagee is not entitled to notice, since he is not liable under the covenant (Tozer v. Buxton (1888), 5 T. L. R. 7).

the form of a notice to pay at the expiration of that period, since the three months' default begins to run forthwith (v).

SECT. 2.
Sale.

448. The mortgagee cannot exercise the power of sale until the notice, where notice is required, has expired, or until such other event as makes it immediately exercisable; but he can enter into a conditional contract to sell on the power becoming exercisable, and can carry such contract into effect provided that the price is then proper (a). The acceptance of a bill of exchange for the amount due only suspends the notice, and on the dishonour of the bill the notice revives, and the mortgagee can sell without a fresh notice (b).

When power of sale may be exercised.

449. The mortgagee will not be restrained from exercising his power of sale because the amount due is in dispute (c), or because the mortgagor has commenced a redemption action (d), or because the mortgagor objects to the manner in which the sale is being arranged (e). But he will be restrained if the mortgagor pays the amount claimed into court (f), or if, upon a subsequent incumbrancer offering to pay off the first mortgage, the mortgagee denies his title to redeem (g); or if the sale will prevent the fulfilment of a contract relating to the property with notice of which the mortgage was taken (h), and which the mortgagor is able to fulfil (i); and the sale is improper if at the time of sale the mortgagor tenders the amount due for principal and interest, though without costs (k), or if due notice to the mortgagor has not been given (l).

When mortgagee may be restrained from exercising power.

That is, the amount which the mortgagee swears to be due to him (Hill v. Kirkwood (1880), 28 W. R. 358, C. A.); unless, on the terms of the mortgage, the claim is excessive (Hickson v. Darlow (1883), 23 Ch. D. 690, C. A.); but where he was, at the time of the mortgage, the mortgagor's solicitor, the court will fix a sum probably sufficient to cover his claim (*Macleod v. (l) Where the power contains a covenant that it shall not be exercised without a specified notice, but that the only remedy shall be in damages against the mortgagee, the court, it has been held, cannot restrain a sale on the ground of want of notice (Prichard v. Wilson (1864), 10 Jur. (N. S.)

the exercise of the power of sale (m). He has his own interest to consider as well as that of the mortgagor, and provided that he keeps within the terms of the power, exercises the power bonâ fide for the purpose of realising the security (n), and takes reasonable precautions to secure a proper price (o), the court will not interfere (p), nor will it inquire whether he was actuated by any further motive (q). A mortgagee is entitled to sell at a price just sufficient to cover the amount due to him, provided the amount is fixed with due regard to the value of the property (r); and, if the sale is bonâ fide, and he charges himself with the whole of the purchase-money, he can sell on the terms that a substantial part, or even the whole, shall remain on mortgage (s).

If the mortgagor seeks relief promptly (a), a sale will be set aside if there is fraud, or if the price is so low as to be in itself evidence of fraud (b); but not on the ground of undervalue alone (c); though if the mortgagee does not sell with proper precautions, he will be charged in taking the accounts with any loss thereby resulting (d).

330); but, ordinarily, want of notice, since it is a ground for setting aside a sale against a purchaser with knowledge (Selwyn v. Garfit (1888), 38 Ch. D. 273, C. A.), is, it seems, a ground for restraining a sale; and see title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., p. 251.

(m) He was so described by Lord ELDON, L.C., in Downes v. Grazebrook (1817), 3 Mer. 200, but this only means that he must exercise the power in a prudent way, with a due regard to the interest of the mortgagor in the surplus sale moneys (Robertson v. Norris (1858), 1 Giff. 421, 424; Jenkins v. Jones (1860), 2 Giff. 99, 108). As to the analogy between trusts and mortgages, see *Cholmondeley (Marquis) v. 451. Where different properties are mortgaged by different mortgagors to the same mortgagee, and a sale of the two properties together is beneficial, both may be sold together, and the purchase-money apportioned (e).

SECT. 2.

Sale.

Different securities held by one mortgagee. Conditions of sale.

452. A mortgagee is entitled to sell upon such conditions as he thinks suitable for securing a sale of the property, and the sale is not invalidated by the insertion of any condition in ordinary use, notwithstanding that in a sense it may be depreciatory (f); but express powers usually provide for the mortgagee selling subject to such conditions as he thinks fit (g), and like provision is made in regard to the statutory powers (h).

453. The mortgagee is entitled to employ agents to effect the sale, and so long as he selects agents presumably competent, he is not liable for their errors of judgment, or errors in matters of detail not seriously affecting the success of the sale or the price realised; but if the agent is guilty of a serious blunder inducing a failure to sell, or a large diminution of the price realised, the mortgagee is responsible, though he may have a remedy against his agent (i).

Employment of agents.

454. Where there are successive mortgages, the first mortgagee can exercise his power of sale without the concurrence of the subsequent mortgagees, but he must account to them for the surplus sale moneys (k). If the second mortgagee exercises his power of sale, he can sell subject to the first mortgage (l); or he can sell

Right of sale as between successive incumbrancers.

(e) Hiatt v. Hillman (1871), 19 W. R. 694; Re Cooper and Allen's Contract for Sale to Harlech (1876), 4 Ch. D. 802. Where the properties are quite separate, evidence is required that a joint sale will produce a higher price; where they are united—e.g., a house and a garden—or are undivided shares of the same property, this is not necessary. The apportionment must be made on the advice of a competent person (Re Cooper and Allen's Contract for Sale to Harlech, supra, at pp. 816, 818).

(f) Such as a condition entitling the vendor to rescind if he is unwilling or unable to answer any requisition (Falkner v. Equitable Reversionary Society (1858), 4 Drew. 352; see Hobson v. Bell (1839), 2 Beav. 17). A condition on sale of a reversionary interest, excluding evidence of the alleged age of the tenant for life, is improper (Cragg v. Alexander, [1867] W. N. 305); but the mortgagee is entitled to use stringent conditions if these are required by the state of the title (Kershaw v. Kalow (1855), 1 Jur. (N. S.) 974). As to conditions of sale, see, generally, title SALE OF LAND.

(g) See p. 245, ante.

See, also, ibid., s. 21 (6), extended by the Conveyancing Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 5 (2), protecting mortgagees against involuntary losses, but the practical value of this protection is doubtful.

(i) Tomlin v. Luce (1889), 41 Ch. D. 573, 575. But the application of the principle there was erroneous, since the error produced an enhanced price; hence the compensation allowed by the vendor was not, as held by Kekewich, J., the measure of the loss sustained (Tomlin v. Luce (1889), 43 Ch. D. 191, C. A.; 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1962). As to negligence of agents, see titles AGENCY, Vol. I., p. 196; AUCTION AND AUCTIONEERS, Vol. I., 514; NEGLIGENCE, pp. 357 et seq., post.

(k) See pp. 259, 260, post. But a first mortgagee can buy up a subsequent incumbrance at a reduced price without communicating to the subsequent incumbrancer an anticipated advantageous sale, and the sale, if afterwards effected, will be valid (Dolman v. Nokes (1855), 22 Beav. 402).

Sale.

free from it, either with the consent of the first mortgagee, who will be paid off out of the purchase-money, and will concur in the conveyance to the purchaser, or under the statutory power (m). In the latter case application (n) must be made to the court to allow payment into court of the amount of the mortgage debt and any interest due thereon, and of such additional amount as the court considers will be sufficient to meet the contingency of any further costs, expenses and interest (o). Thereupon the court may declare the land to be freed from the mortgage, and make any order for conveyance or vesting proper for giving effect to the sale (p).

Fixtures.

455. An express or statutory power to sell the mortgaged property or any part thereof does not authorise the sale of fixtures separately from the land, whether the fixtures are expressly mentioned in the mortgage (q) or not (r).

Minerals.

456. In the absence of express or statutory power the mortgagee is not entitled to sell the surface of land, with a reservation of minerals, or to sell the minerals separately from the surface (s); but such a sale may be made, in the case of mortgages executed before the 1st January, 1912, with the sanction of the court (t), and as regards mortgages executed after the 31st December, 1911, without such sanction (u).

Easements and restrictive covenants.

457. In the absence of statutory power the mortgagee cannot, on a sale of part of the property, grant easements over, or impose restrictive covenants upon, the part remaining unsold, or reserve easements or the benefit of covenants over the part sold (a), save that a conveyance made in pursuance of such a sale has its ordinary effect with regard to apparent continuous easements. Hence it will give to the purchaser such rights of light and other easements as he would take without express mention if the mortgagee were selling as absolute owner (b). But, where the mortgage is executed after the 31st December, 1911, the mortgagee may create restrictive covenants or conditions against either the part sold or the part remaining unsold (c), and may grant or reserve easements in relation to the part sold or the part remaining unsold (d).

SECT. 2.

Sale.SUB-SECT. 7.—Who may Purchase.

458. A mortgagee cannot sell to himself, either alone or with others, nor to a trustee for himself (e). Unless there are different persons filling the positions of vendor and purchaser the transaction is not a sale at all, and is not an exercise of the power. The interposition of a trustee does not affect the substance of the transaction (f). The same principle prevents a sale to an agent or solicitor acting for the mortgagee in the matter of the sale (g); consequently, on a sale by a building society as mortgagee, a purchase by the secretary (h), or other officer concerned with the conduct of the sale (i), is void. But the mortgagee may sell to a solicitor who has not the conduct of the sale (k).

Mortgagee cannot sell to himself.

C.; Henderson v. Astwood, Astwood v. Cobbold, Cobbold v. Astwood, [1894] A. C. 150, P. C.). Where a sale is being conducted by the court, the mortgagee may obtain leave to bid, if the mortgagor does not object; but otherwise he will not be allowed to become the purchaser, unless no purchaser at an adequate price can be found (Tenant v. Trenchard (1869), 4 Ch. App. 537, 547). But a creditor holding a security for his debt not completed by conveyance, containing a trust for sale under which he has never acted, is not debarred from purchasing from the agent of the debtor (*Chambers v. SUB-SECT. 8.—Protection of Purchasers.

Purchasers' protection from irregularity in sale.

459. In the absence of any provision for the protection of purchasers, evidence must be furnished that the event on which the power of sale is to arise has happened (o). But express powers (if in the usual form) and also statutory powers provide that, where a sale is made in professed exercise of the power, the title of the purchaser shall not be impeachable on the ground that no case had arisen to authorise the sale, or that due notice was not given, or that the power was otherwise improperly or irregularly exercised; but any person damnified by the unauthorised, or improper, or irregular exercise of the power has his remedy in damages against the person exercising the power (p).

Effect of notice of irregularity.

Under the above provisions the purchaser is exempted from any duty to make inquiries, and, provided that he has no notice of any irregularity, he is protected notwithstanding that an event giving rise to the power of sale has not occurred, and even though at the time of the sale the mortgage has been paid off (q). But he is not protected if he has notice, actual (r) or constructive (s), of the

The Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 21, only applied where the conveyance to the purchaser had been executed, so that before conveyance a purchaser was entitled to inquire whether a case for exercising the power had arisen (Life Interest and Reversionary Securities Corporation v. Hand-in-Hand Fire and Life Insurance Society, [1898] 2 Ch. 230); but the amending provision, which is retrospective, excludes such inquiry. The ordinary express power and the power under Lord Cranworth's Act (Trustees and Mortgagees Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145)) have the same effect, since they extend to sales made in professed exercise of the power (ibid., s. 13); Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., p. 509); and see *Haddington Island Quarry Co., Ltd. v. irregularity; consequently he is not protected if the exercise of the power depends on a notice being given which in the circumstances cannot have been given (t), though he is, perhaps, protected if the want of notice could have been waived by the mortgagor (a); and he is protected if the want of notice has been in fact waived by the persons to whom it should have been given (b).

SECT. 2.
Sale.

SUB-SECT. 9.—Application of Proceeds of Sale.

460. The effect of a sale under a power of sale is to destroy the equity of redemption in the land (c), and to constitute the mortgagee exercising the power of sale a trustee of the surplus proceeds (if any) after satisfying his own charge, first for the subsequent incumbrancers, and ultimately for the mortgagor (d). In the absence of provision in the power of sale, this principle determines the application of the proceeds, but provision is contained in the statutory powers, and usually in express powers.

Effect of sale.

461. The receipt in writing of the mortgagee is a sufficient discharge for any money arising from the exercise of his power of sale under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (e), and such money is applicable in the first instance to the discharge of any prior incumbrances to which the sale is not made subject (f); the balance or the whole, as the case may be, is held by him in trust to be applied, first, in payment of the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by him, as incident to the sale, or any attempted sale, or otherwise; secondly, in discharge of the mortgage money, interest, and costs, and other money, if any, due under the mortgage; and the residue is to be paid to the person entitled to the mortgaged property, or authorised to give receipts for the proceeds of sale (g).

Application of money from sale under statutory powers.

Similar provision is made by express powers (h) and by the Variations as to persons ultimately entitled.

Hanbury* (1860), 1 Drew. & Sm. 143 (where the mortgagor, to whom a three months' notice was to be given, was dead, and no representative had been appointed; the point was not dealt with on appeal, (1865) 2 De G. J. & Sm. 450, C. A.; (1867), L. R. 2 H. L. 1); Selwyn v. Garfit (1888), 38 Ch. D. 273, C. A. (where the notice could only be given after default, and the necessary period had not elapsed).

If the persons concerned propose to join in the conveyance in order to show the waiver, the purchaser cannot refuse to complete on the ground that the title offered is different from that which he contracted to take (ibid.). But in Forster v. Hoggart (1850), 15 Q. B. 155, it was held that the purchaser was not bound to take a title depending on waiver.

(c) See pp. 71, 156, ante. Consequently it defeats the rights of all subsequent incumbrancers, whose remedy then is only against the proceeds of sale (South Eastern Rail. Co. (Directors etc.) v. Jortin (1857), 6 H. L. Cas. 425, 435).

power of sale under Lord Cranworth's Act (i), with variations in the description of the persons entitled to the residue. Thus, payment may be directed to the mortgagor, his heirs and assigns, or the personal representatives may be substituted for heirs, or, as in Lord Cranworth's Act (i), both heirs and personal representatives may be mentioned. But notwithstanding a limitation to heirs, the right to the surplus on the death of the mortgagor depends on the state of the property at his death (k). The proceeds of sale of personal property, in any case, go to the personal representatives, and where real and personal property are sold together after the mortgagor's death the proceeds are apportioned (l). The direction in the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (m), for payment to the person entitled has the like effect (n).

462. Where there are subsequent incumbrancers, their claim to receive the surplus proceeds is prior to that of the mortgagor, and if the first mortgagee has notice (o), he is liable to them if he pays the proceeds to the mortgagor (p). If the entire equity of redemption has been conveyed to a second mortgagee, the whole of the proceeds can be paid to him, and his receipt is a good discharge (q); but the first mortgagee may refuse to pay him more than the amount due on his mortgage (r), and if there is any doubt as to the persons entitled to the surplus proceeds the first mortgagee can pay such surplus into court (s).

shown that there is a surplus, and then he becomes only a constructive trustee (a). Upon the sale being completed, interest ceases to run against the mortgagor (b), and the mortgagee is charged simple (c) interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on the balance in his hands (d), unless, owing to disputes between the persons entitled, the money has remained unproductive (e).

SECT. 3.—Appointment of Receiver.

SUB-SECT. 1.—By the Court.

464. Where there has been a breach of the mortgagor's obligations (f), or where, without such actual breach, the security is in jeopardy (g), the mortgagee can obtain the appointment of a receiver by the court. The appointment is made with a view to preserve the property if it is in danger, or, by intercepting the income, to provide a fund for payment of the mortgage; and it is made either as a step in an action brought to enforce the security, or in an action having the appointment of a receiver as its sole object (h). The receiver, when appointed, is entitled to receive rents in arrear (i).

appointment.

It is the practice of the court to appoint a receiver on the Molloy* (1845), 2 Jo. & Lat. 521; Bissill v. Bradford Tramways Co., [1891] W. N. 51); and, in the case of a floating security, where the breach relied on is non-payment of principal, it is sufficient if it is due before the application, although it was not due when the writ was issued (Re Carshalton Park Estate, Ltd., Graham v. The Co., Turnell v. The Co., [1908] 2 Ch. 62).

(h) The security may in effect consist only in the appointment of a receiver; see Taylor v. Emerson (1843), 4 Dr. & War. 117. As to the circumstances under which a receiver will be appointed, the stage of the action at which the application may be made, and generally as to receivers appointed by the court and their duties and liabilities, see title RECEIVERS. As to the appointment of receivers on behalf of mortgagees and debenture stock holders of companies established for public purposes, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 737, 743. application of a legal as well as of an equitable mortgagee (k). Where an action is pending this is the proper procedure, notwithstanding that the mortgagee has power to appoint a receiver himself (l). The appointment will not be made after judgment for foreclosure absolute (m).

465. A receiver's functions are limited to receipt of income and payment of ascertained outgoings (n). He has no general powers of management (o), but where the mortgage, expressly or by implication, includes a business, a receiver and manager may be appointed (p), though only with a view to the sale of the business as a going concern (q); and a receiver and manager will, if necessary, be appointed of land (r).

466. The appointment of a receiver at the instance of a puisne incumbrancer is without prejudice to the rights of prior incumbrancers (s). Hence if a prior mortgagee is not in possession, the appointment is made subject to his right to take possession (a), and if a prior mortgagee is in possession, it will not be made, so long as anything remains due to him, unless he refuses to accept a tender of what he alleges to be due (b). To avoid the appointment being made he must swear that something is due, though he need not swear to a specific sum (c). If a receiver has been appointed in the absence of a prior incumbrancer, he will be discharged and the prior incumbrancer, although only equitable, let into possession (d); and where other incumbrances are known to exist, the appointment may be accompanied by an inquiry as to the priorities of the several incumbrancers (e). A receiver will be appointed against the owner of the legal estate who refuses to satisfy equitable interests (f), or if there is a strong prima facie case for setting the conveyance to him aside (g); but not otherwise, unless the rents and profits are in danger (h).

(k) Re Pope (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 743, 749, C. A.; compare Anglo-Italian Bank v. Davies (1878), 9 Ch. D. 275, 286, C. A. A fortiori, where the mortgage includes both legal and equitable estates (Pease v. Fletcher (1875), 1 Ch. D. 273). An equitable mortgagee by deposit of deeds is entitled to a receiver (Aberdeen v. Chitty (1838), 3 Y. & C. (ex.) 379). But the relief is discretionary, and will not usually be granted where the mortgagee is in possession (Re Prytherch, Prytherch v. Williams (1889), 42 Ch. (l) Tillett v. Nixon (1883), 25 Ch. D. 238. In a partition action, a mortgagee of a share can obtain the appointment of a receiver over the whole property (Sumsion v. Crutwell (1883), 31 W. R. 399); compare Fall v. Elkins (1861), 9 W. R. 861, where the appointment was limited to the mortgaged share; and see, generally, title PARTITION, pp. 834 et seq., post.

A receiver will be appointed in aid of a vendor's lien (i); but since the lien depends on the declaration of the court, he will not be appointed till after judgment (k). If the property sold includes a business—such as a colliery—a receiver and manager may be appointed, as in other cases (l).

arrear and growing due to him (m); and if the mortgagor is in possession, he must attorn tenant at an occupation rent, or in the alternative deliver up possession to the receiver (n); but an order for delivery of possession will not be made before judgment in the action (o).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Out of Court.

468. In order to give the mortgagee the advantages, without the liabilities, of being in possession (p), a receiver may be appointed at the time of the mortgage, and as part of the security, or subsequently under an express power in the mortgage deed. In the former case the appointment is made by the mortgagor with the concurrence of the mortgagee, either by a separate deed (q), which can be given to the receiver as evidence of his authority, or in the mortgage deed (r). In the latter case the appointment is made by the mortgagee, either by writing under hand (s) or by deed, according to the terms of the power, and in either case it is provided that the receiver shall be the agent of the mortgagor (a). The deed of appointment, or the power and appointment under the power, authorise the receiver to receive the rents of the property and provide for their application (b). Where successive incumbrancers join in a deed appointing a receiver and declaring trusts of the receipts, with an ultimate trust for the mortgagor, an incumbrancer subsequent to the deed is entitled to the benefit of it, but in proceedings for an account or for the execution of the trusts he must make all the prior incumbrancers parties (c).

Burchnall, supra*). If there is no order for the mortgagor to attorn, he must pay rent from the date of demand by the receiver (Yorkshire Banking Co. v. Mullan (1887), 35 Ch. D. 125). In Hawkes v. Holland, supra, it was said that the order should be for delivery of possession, but the alternative of attornment was probably overlooked.

469. The insertion in an ordinary mortgage of an express power to appoint a receiver is unusual, and where the mortgage deed has been executed since the 31st December, 1881, reliance is placed on the power given by statute to mortgagees for the purpose, whereby a mortgagee has power, when the mortgage money has become due, to appoint a receiver of the mortgaged property, or of any part thereof (d); but the power is not to be exercised until the mortgagee has become entitled to exercise the statutory power of sale (e). The appointment may be made by writing under the hand of the mortgagee (f), and the receiver may be removed and a new receiver appointed from time to time in like manner (g).

Where the mortgage was executed between the 28th August, 1860, and the 1st January, 1882, the power under Lord Cranworth's Act (h) is applicable, if not excluded. This power authorises the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of real and leasehold property, and not of income generally; it is exercisable in the same events as the power of sale under that Act (i), but without the restriction as to six months' notice, and a new receiver may be appointed from time to time (k).

Under both statutes the receiver is deemed to be the agent of the mortgagor, and the mortgagor is solely responsible for his acts or defaults, unless the mortgage deed otherwise provides (l).

The death of the mortgagor does not operate as a revocation of the power to appoint a receiver (m).

(l) Ibid., s. 18; Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 24 (2). But the agency may be modified by the terms of the mortgage deed (Richards v. Kidderminster Corporation, [1896] 2 Ch. 212, 220), and a receiver who, though originally appointed by the mortgagee under the statutory power, is subsequently appointed by the court, ceases to be the agent of the mortgagor (Hand v. Blow, [1901] 2 Ch. 721, 732, C. A.). As to the effect of payment of interest out of rent by the receiver, see title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., pp. 72, 94.

SECT. 3.

Appointment of Receiver.

Powers as to recovery of income of property.

470. Under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (n), the receiver has power to demand and recover all the income of the property over which he is appointed receiver, by action, distress, or otherwise, in the name either of the mortgagor or mortgagee, to the full extent of the estate or interest which the mortgagor could dispose of, and to give effectual receipts; and a person paying money to him is not concerned to inquire whether any case has happened to authorise the receiver to act (o). He has the same powers under Lord Cranworth's Act (p) in respect of rents and profits of real and leasehold property. A receiver appointed otherwise than under statute has only the powers conferred on him by his appointment, and, unless specially empowered to do so, cannot sue or distrain in the name of the person entitled to sue or distrain, that is, either the mortgagor or mortgagee according to the circumstances (q). A receiver appointed by debenture-holders, who, under the terms of the debentures, is entitled to take possession, will be put into possession by the court as against the liquidator, though if the court were asked to appoint a receiver it would appoint the liquidator (r).

Powers as to insurance and application of income.

471. The receiver, if appointed under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (s), is empowered to insure the mortgaged property against fire, and to execute necessary or proper repairs, but in each case only if so directed in writing by the mortgagee (s). He must apply moneys received by him (1) in discharge of all rents, taxes, rates, and outgoings affecting the mortgaged property; (2) in keeping down annual sums and interest having priority to the mortgage under which he is receiver; (3) in payment of his commission, and of premiums on fire, life and other insurances, payable under the mortgage deed or the statute, and the cost of necessary repairs directed in writing by the mortgagee (t); and (4) in payment of interest under the mortgage (u). The residue he pays to the person who, but for his possession, would be entitled to receive the income (v).

(n) 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 24 (3); and, after the appointment of a receiver, the mortgagor cannot distrain, even though he alleges negligence on the part of the receiver (Bayly v. Went (1884), 51 L. T. 764); and a distress by him is illegal (Woolston v. Ross, [1900] 1 Ch. 788). As to estoppel by payment of rent by a tenant to a receiver, see Serjeant v. Nash, Field & Co., [1903] 2 K. B. 304, C. A.; and title ESTOPPEL, Vol. XIII., pp. 402 et seq.

(u) The receiver must pay arrears of interest due at the time of his appointment, as well as interest accruing subsequently (National Bank v. Kenney, [1898] 1 I. R. 197).

(v) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 24 (8).

Like provision as to insurance and application of rents is made by Lord Cranworth's Act (x), but without power for the mortgagee to direct repairs; and appointments of receivers under receivership deeds or express powers contain similar provisions. The statutory application of income may be extended by the mortgage deed, so as, for instance, to authorise a receiver and manager of a business to pay unsecured debts (a).

SECT. 3.
Appointment of Receiver.

472. A receiver appointed under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (b), is entitled to retain out of any money received by him a commission at such rate, not exceeding 5 per cent. on the gross amount of all money received, as is specified in his appointment, and, if no rate is specified, then at the rate of 5 per cent. on that gross amount; but the court may, on the receiver's application, allow him a higher rate. The rate thus determined covers the receiver's remuneration, and all costs, charges and expenses incurred by him as receiver (b). Lord Cranworth's Act contains a similar provision, but without power for the court to increase the rate (c). Appointments made otherwise than under the statutes usually provide specially as to remuneration, and if they do not, the receiver will be entitled to a proper remuneration as a quantum meruit (d).

SECT. 4.—Action on Covenant for Payment.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Who may Sue.

473. An action on the covenant for payment (e) contained in the mortgage deed can be brought by the mortgagee (f), and those claiming the mortgage security under him, whether by devolution on death or by alienation inter vivos. Accordingly if the mortgagee has not assigned the mortgage, the right to sue passes on his death to his personal representatives (g); but if he has specifically bequeathed the mortgage, the mortgage debt and the right to sue for it will vest in the legatee upon the executors' assent to the bequest being given (h), though since freehold mortgaged property

Matthews* (1842), 10 M. & W. 768), according to the nature of the liability. The form of action is not now material; see titles ACTION, Vol. I., pp. 37, 45, 47; PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

vests on the death of a mortgagee in his executors by statute and not under the will (i), it is usual for the executors to transfer the mortgage security to the legatee, and this is necessary in order to vest the property in him. If the mortgagee or his personal representatives transfer the mortgage, the right to sue on the covenant vests in the transferee on his giving notice in writing of such transfer to the mortgagor (k).

Where the mortgagees are trustees the beneficiaries are not entitled to sue on the covenant (l); they must call upon the trustees either to sue or to allow the beneficiaries to sue in their name (m). Similarly, where debentures or debenture stock are secured by a trust deed, the right of action is in the trustees and not in the debenture-holders or debenture stockholders (n), unless there is a direct covenant with the latter (o).

SUB-SECT. 2.—When Right of Action Arises.

Covenant to pay on, or on or after, a certain day.

474. When a day for payment is fixed by the covenant (p), the right of action arises upon non-payment on that day (q). A covenant

(k) See title CHUSES IN ACTION, Vol. IV., pp. 372, 373.

(l) The beneficiary is not mentioned in the mortgage, and no benefit to him arises under it directly. Where the contract shows that a beneficiary is to have the benefit of it, he may sue on it (Gandy v. Gandy (1885), 30 Ch. D. 57, C. A.; Kelly v. Larkin, [1910] 2 I. R. 550; see title CONTRACT Vol. VII., p. 344).

(p) As to the effect of a covenant to repay the principal by instalments, see p. 114, ante.

(q) The affirmative covenant implies that the lender will not sue before that day (Bolton v. Buckenham, [1891] 1 Q. B. 278, 281, C. A.); and consequently a substituted covenant taken by the mortgagee for payment at a date subsequent to that originally fixed is a binding arrangement to give time, and ordinarily discharges a surety; see title GUARANTEE, Vol. XV., p. 552. If the covenant also fixes a place for payment, the creditor must attend there to receive payment, and there is no default unless he does so (Thorn v. City Rice Mills (1889), 40 Ch. D. 357; see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 415, 416). The action on the covenant is only for principal and interest, and any other sums which the mortgagor has covenanted to pay, not for expenses incurred by the mortgagee outside the covenant, though he may be entitled to these in a redemption or foreclosure action (Re Sneyd, Ex parte Fewings (1883), 25 Ch. D. 338, C. A.; see pp. 227, 231, ante). As to the right of action of mortgagees or debenture stock-holders of statutory companies, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 735, 743. If a bond has been given for the mortgage debt, the amount recoverable for principal and interest is, in general, limited to the amount of the penalty, and no more is recoverable against the mortgaged property if the mortgage is to secure the bond debt (Hughes v. Wynne (1832), 1 My. & K. 20); but contra, if the mortgage is for the principal sum and interest without reference to the bond (Clarke v. Abingdon (Lord) (1810), 17 Ves. 106; Mathews v. Keble (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 467; (1868), 3 Ch. App. 691; see title BONDS, Vol. III., p. 93). As to bonds given as collateral security, see ibid., pp. 99, 100.

to pay on or after a certain date gives the covenantee the right to payment at any time after that date, though possibly demand must first be made (r).

When the principal sum is payable on demand, and there is no provision, express or implied, for notice to be given, the necessity for notice depends on whether the covenant is direct or collateral. If it is direct, that is, if it secures the covenantor's own debt, no actual demand is required: the right of action accrues immediately on the money being advanced (s). But if the covenant is collateral—where, for instance, it is to secure the debt of another—the action cannot be brought till after actual demand (a).

Where the principal sum is payable on demand in writing, actual demand must be made before the right of action arises (b), and any other condition prescribed as a preliminary to suing on the covenant must be observed (c). A provision that the demand must be served on the premises or in some particular manner renders such service sufficient but not essential. Any mode of service is also sufficient which brings home to the mortgagor the fact that the demand has been made (d).

If the mortgagee has realised his security or part of it by sale, he must credit the mortgagor with the amount realised, less the expenses of realisation, and can bring an action on the covenant for any balance remaining due (e); but, if instead of realising, he has foreclosed, he cannot sue on the covenant without reopening the foreclosure (f). A separate action on the covenant should not be brought while a foreclosure action is pending, if the mortgagee can get an order for personal payment in the foreclosure action (g). The appointment of a receiver by the mortgagee does not prevent

It has been held that a bond to secure money payable on demand is not forfeited till after demand (Carter v. Ring (1813), 3 Camp. 459; see title BONDS, Vol. III., p. 92); but the distinction is doubtful (see Re Brown's (J.) Estate, Brown v. Brown, supra).

(b) See Norton v. Ellam, supra. In Re Brown's (J.) Estate, Brown v. Brown, supra, it was suggested that a provision for the principal to be payable on demand, with interest in the meantime, implied a postponement of payment, so as, in effect, to make a demand necessary; but the decision seems to be really based on the fact that the covenant was by a surety.

his bringing an action on the covenant by specially indorsed writ, but if there is a question as to the true state of the accounts leave to defend will be given (h).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Who may be Sued.

475. The action on the covenant can be brought against the mortgagor and against any person who has joined with him in the covenant or has given a separate covenant as surety. Words added to a covenant excluding personal liability may be repugnant, and the full liability remain (i); but it is permissible to qualify the covenant; thus a covenant by a trustee may in terms limit his liability to the time while he is a trustee (k).

476. The covenant for payment of the mortgage debt does not run with the land, and hence the assignee of the equity of redemption is not liable to be sued thereon by the mortgagee (l); but if he is a purchaser on sale, he usually enters into a covenant to indemnify the mortgagor against the debt, and, in the absence of express covenant, such a covenant of indemnity is implied (m). The assignee may make himself directly liable by entering into a fresh covenant with the mortgagee (n), but such liability is not implied from the mere payment of interest (o).

477. On the death of the mortgagor an action on the covenant lies against his personal representatives, and the judgment can be enforced against them to the extent of the assets remaining unadministered (p). The mortgagee also has the remedies of a specialty creditor against the heir or devisee of the mortgagor's real estate not comprised in the mortgage (q), and the remedy, common to

The bringing of an action against the mortgagor gives him a new right to redeem; see p. 139, ante; see Re Richardson, Ex parte Governors of St. Thomas's Hospital, [1911] 2 K. B. 705, where an action was brought in the joint names of a lessor and a lessee to enforce a covenant of indemnity.

But the implied indemnity is excluded by an express covenant for indemnity (Mills v. United Counties Bank, Ltd., [1912] 1 Ch. 231, C. A.). If the mortgaged property is a contingent reversionary interest there may, perhaps, be an action on the implied covenant before it vests in possession (ibid., doubting the decision of EVE, J., on this point, [1912] 1 Ch. 669).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Loss of Right of Action.

478. On payment of the mortgage debt the mortgagor is entitled to a reconveyance of the mortgaged property (t); hence a mortgagee who has foreclosed and subsequently sold the property, so that he cannot reconvey, is precluded from suing on the covenant for payment (u); but this principle does not apply to a sale under the mortgagee's power of sale (v), and if it does not realise enough to pay off the mortgage, he may sue for the deficiency (a). Nor is the mortgagee prevented from suing if his inability to restore the property is due to the intervention of a third person, as in the case of a forfeiture of leasehold property by the lessor, not due to the mortgagee's default (b).

SECT. 5.—*Foreclosure or Sale.*SUB-SECT. 1.—Nature of Right to Foreclosure.

480. Under a legal mortgage the mortgagee becomes absolute owner at law so soon as the day fixed for redemption is past, and the equity of redemption arises by virtue of the interference of equity to allow the mortgagor to redeem, notwithstanding that his legal right of redemption is gone (c). But equity does not continue the interference when the mortgagee desires to make his absolute ownership effectual. Upon his bringing an action for foreclosure a further day is appointed for payment, and if the money is not then paid the court refuses again to interfere and leaves the parties to their legal rights (f). The court removes the stop it has itself put on (g), and the property belongs to the mortgagee absolutely (h).

The effect of the order for foreclosure is to vest a new title in the mortgagee. Previously he was, in the view of equity, a mere incumbrancer. Under the order the beneficial ownership for the first time vests in him (i).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Right to Foreclosure or Sale.

Foreclosure of equitable mortgagee.

481. The right of foreclosure exists in the case of an equitable mortgagee who has taken a conveyance by way of mortgage (k) of the equity of redemption—in which case he has, on paying off prior incumbrances, a right to call for the legal estate—or who has taken an agreement, express or implied, for example, where the security is not under seal, see ibid., p. 84. As to recovery of arrears of interest, see ibid., pp. 97 et seq.

(e) See pp. 71, 138, ante.

(f) Sampson v. Pattison (1842), 1 Hare, 533, 536. But there is no foreclosure against the Crown. Formerly the order was that the mortgagee should hold and enjoy the mortgaged property till the Crown thought fit to redeem (Lutwich's Case (1724-34), cited 2 Atk. 223; Hodge v. A.-G. (1838), 3 Y. & C. (EX.) 342). A sale might be ordered if the Crown had only an equitable interest, but not where the legal estate was vested in the Crown, since the court could not compel the Crown to convey (Hodge v. A.-G., supra). But the present practice is to direct a sale and rely on the Crown conveying (Hancock v. A.-G. (1864), 10 Jur. (N. S.) 557; Bartlett v. Rees (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 395; see Rogers v. Maule (1841), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 4; Scott v. Robarts (1856), 4 W. R. 499; compare Prescott v. Tyler (1837), 1 Jur. 470; Prescott v. Tyler (1838), 2 Jur. 870, where the Crown had no legal estate, and declined either to claim or disclaim). The question has usually arisen where the mortgagor's estate has been forfeited for felony; but under the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), the estate now vests in an administrator (see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 429), who, it is believed, is subject to the ordinary procedure by foreclosure. Where it appears that the Crown has no interest, the Attorney-General is dismissed from the action (Prescott v. Tyler (1837), 1 Jur. 470). As to foreclosure of copyholds, see title COPYHOLDS, Vol. VIII., p. 94; as to foreclosure under building society mortgage, see title BUILDING SOCIETIES, Vol. III., p. 369; as to land abroad, see title CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., p. 205.

by deposit of deeds (l), for a legal mortgage (m): hence the remedy on such a charge is foreclosure (n). The judgment in such case is prefaced by a declaration of charge, and, in order to complete the mortgagee's title, it directs a conveyance to him of the legal estate (a).

The remedy of foreclosure is available in respect of personal as well as real property (b); of reversionary as well as present interests (c); of a partnership share (d); and of an advowson (e).

Foreclosure was, however, treated as the remedy for the charge in Hugill v. Wilkinson (1888), 38 Ch. D. 480, perhaps because the security was more than a mere charge and operated as an equitable conveyance. A judgment may become a charge on land under the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 13—though not till a writ or order for executing it has been registered; see title JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, Vol. XVIII., p. 220—as if the judgment debtor had by writing under his hand agreed to charge the land; and the execution creditor can obtain a sale in respect thereof; see titles EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., p. 71; JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, Vol. XVIII., p. 220. If this were a mere charge, the remedy would be by sale alone (Footner v. Sturgis (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 736); but it has been treated as equivalent to an agreement to execute a legal mortgage, so as to give a right of foreclosure (Rolleston v. Morton (1842), 1 Dr. & War. 171, 195; Jones v. Bailey (1853), 17 Beav. 582; Messer v. Boyle (1856), 21 Beav. 559; D'Auvergne v. Cooper, [1899] W. N. 256; contra, Shea v. Moore, supra, on the Debtors (Ireland) Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 105), s. 22 (Pigot's Act)). As to foreclosure of debentures of a limited company, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 382 et seq.

is not by foreclosure, but by sale (h); and a sale is the proper remedy where the mortgage is made by way of trust for sale (i).

483. Apart from statute, a mortgagee who has a remedy by foreclosure is not entitled alternatively to an order for sale (k), unless there are special circumstances which make a sale the appropriate remedy (l), or unless he has, or is entitled to have, a mortgage containing a power of sale (m). It seems that even an equitable mortgagee by deposit was restricted to foreclosure (n) if there was no written memorandum entitling him to a mortgage with a power of sale (o); but in Ireland the usual judgment in a foreclosure action is for sale (p), though the jurisdiction to order foreclosure exists there as well as in England (q).

484. Where land is registered the registered proprietor of a registered charge on it has the same remedy by foreclosure or sale as if the land had been transferred to him by way of mortgage; subject, however, to any entry to the contrary on the register (r).

485. There is statutory jurisdiction to order a sale in a foreclosure action on the request of the mortgagee or of any person interested either in the mortgage money or the equity of redemption, notwithstanding the dissent of any other person, and notwithstanding that any person so interested does not appear in the action. It is not essential that any time should be allowed for

But apparently, where there was an agreement for a mortgage, the mortgagee might elect to dispense with the mortgage and rely only on his charge, so as to have a sale (Kennard v. Futvoye (1860), 2 Giff. 81; Matthews v. Goodday (1861), 8 Jur. (N. S.) 90).

Where the owner of the equity of redemption was an infant, and a sale would be beneficial to him, this was directed (Redshaw v. Newbold (1848), 12 Jur. 833; Hutton v. Sealy (1858), 4 Jur. (N. S.) 450; see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 82); or where the mortgagee was also trustee of the equity of redemption (Tennant v. Trenchard (1869) 4 Ch. App. 537, 544; see Lucas v. Seale (1740), 2 Atk. 56).

redemption or for payment of any mortgage money, and the sale may be directed on such terms as the court thinks fit, including the deposit in court of a reasonable sum, fixed by the court, to meet the expenses of the sale and the performance of the terms (s).

SECT. 5.
Foreclosure
or Sale.

486. A sale may be directed at any time before the foreclosure has become absolute (t). The only condition is that request shall be made by one of the persons specified. This gives rise to the discretionary power of the court, and hence the order may be made on an interlocutory application (a). But if the writ or summons claims foreclosure only and the mortgagor does not appear, an order for sale will not be made unless he has had notice (b).

When sale
directed.

487. An order for sale will not be made in the absence of any evidence as to value (c), nor against the wish of the plaintiff if the property is situated in several places and cannot be advantageously sold in one lot (d), nor where the order would necessarily include property not subject to the mortgage (e); and it will be refused if the security is deficient, and the mortgagor's application is based only on a speculative rise in value (f); or a sale may be ordered on the terms of the puisne mortgagee or the mortgagor requesting a sale paying a sum into court to guarantee the plaintiff against loss (g).

not directed.

488. An immediate sale will not usually be directed, but the sale will be postponed till after three months from the date of the certificate of the result of accounts and inquiries, and the order will be for

The Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 25, applies to actions brought either before or after the commencement of the Act, but it does not apply to Ireland (ibid., s. 25 (5), (7)), the jurisdiction to direct a sale being there already established (see p. 274, ante). It also extends to equitable mortgages by deposit, whether accompanied by an agreement to execute a legal mortgage or not (Oldham v. Stringer (1884), 33 W. R. 251); but a mortgage on a public statutory undertaking is not enforceable by sale; see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 738.

Similarly an order for foreclosure absolute may be made after an order for sale (Lloyds Bank, Ltd. v. Colston, [1912] W. N. 26).

or Sale.

Conduct of sale, in default of redemption, of the property, or of so much as is required to satisfy the amount found due to the plaintiff (h).

The conduct of the sale will usually be given to the mortgagor, since it is his interest to secure the best price for the property; and since he will be liable for the expenses of the sale, it is in this case not necessary to require him to give security for them (i). The sale may be made out of court, the reserve price being fixed in chambers and the money paid into court (k).

SUB-SECT. 3.—When the Right Arises.

Time when right arises depends on proviso for
redemption.

489. So long as the mortgagor has a legal right of redemption there can be no foreclosure; but so soon as the estate in law has become forfeited, the right to commence a foreclosure action arises, unless the mortgagee has by special stipulation postponed the right (l). Consequently, the time when the right arises depends on the form of the proviso for redemption. If a day is fixed for redemption, the right arises on default in payment on that day; if the proviso is for redemption on payment of the principal on demand, the right arises after demand and a reasonable time to comply with it (m).

Effect where

ditional on

An immediate sale may be ordered where the property is small and the security deficient (Oldham v. Stringer (1884), 33 W. R. 251; Williams v. Owen (1883), 27 Sol. Jo. 256), or a short interval may be fixed (see Charlewood v. Hammer (1884), 28 Sol. Jo. 710), though not where these elements are not present, and the mortgagor expects to pay off the mortgages (Hopkinson v. Miers (1889), 34 Sol. Jo. 128).

(i) Davies v. Wright (1886), 32 Ch. D. 220; see Manchester and Salford Bank v. Scowcroft (1883), 27 Sol. Jo. 517; Woolley v. Colman (1881), 21 Ch. D. 169; but there is no general rule that the conduct of the sale will be given to a subsequent incumbrancer or the mortgagor (Christy v. Van Tromp, [1886] W. N. 111). The parties having the conduct of the sale are not chargeable with any impropriety in connection with the sale on the part of other persons, in which they are not implicated (Union Bank v. Munster (1887), 37 Ch. D. 51).

(k) Woolley v. Colman, supra; Davies v. Wright, supra. If the mortgagee opposes the sale, the reserve price will be fixed at a price sufficient, if practicable, to cover his mortgage, but not so great as to make the sale abortive (Woolley v. Colman, supra; compare Whitbread v. Roberts (1859), 28 L. J. (CH.) 431; and as to the terms on which the mortgagor will be allowed the conduct of the sale, see Brewer v. Square, [1892] 2 Ch. 111. As to sales out of court, see R. S. C., Ord. 51, r. 1A; Cumberland Union Banking Co. v. Maryport Hematite Iron and Steel Co., [1892] 1 Ch. 92. For a form of conveyance on such a sale, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XII., p. 591.

(l) See Bonham v. Newcomb (1684), 1 Vern. 232 (proviso for redemption at any time during the life of the mortgagor); and see ibid., pp. 7, 214.

(m) See Balfe v. Lord (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 480; and see pp. 121, 122, ante. A proviso allowing redemption on payment at any time, if accompanied by an express provision for the mortgagee going into receipt of rents and profits, may make the security a Welsh mortgage, and then there is no right of foreclosure (Teulon v. Curtis (1832), You. 610; O'Connell v. Cummins (1840), 2 I. Eq. R. 251); see pp. 87, 88, ante.

interest in the meantime, there can be no foreclosure before the day fixed, notwithstanding that there is a covenant for periodical payment of interest, and that the mortgagor is in default as to such payment (n). But if the proviso for redemption is conditional on payment of intermediate interest, where, for instance, it is a proviso for redemption on payment of principal on a fixed date with interest half-yearly in the meantime, or on payment of principal and interest in accordance with the covenant, the right to foreclosure arises upon default in payment of interest (o).

SECT. 5.
Foreclosure
or Sale.

491. Instead of fixing a distant date for redemption, it is usual, when the loan is to continue for a term certain, to fix the usual period of six months, and then to provide for the money not being called in or steps taken to enforce the mortgage for the agreed term or until after a specified notice has been given (p). But this is made conditional on payment of interest and observance of the mortgagor's covenants, and the right to foreclosure arises on default in such payment or observance (q). The default is not waived merely by subsequent acceptance of interest (r), but may be waived otherwise (a). In the absence of such a condition, however, default in payment of interest does not accelerate the time for foreclosure (b).

term conditional on payment of
interest.

492. The above rules apply to foreclosure under a mortgage of an equity of redemption or other equitable interest effected by conveyance subject to redemption. Where there is no actual mortgage, but only an agreement to execute a mortgage, or a charge by deposit of title deeds which implies such an agreement, the right of foreclosure arises on non-payment of the money at the time agreed upon, or if no time is agreed upon, then on non-payment within a reasonable time after demand (c).

Equitable

and charges.

493. The bankruptcy of the mortgagor does not prevent the bringing of the action (d). The action may be brought although SUB-SECT. 4.—Who may Institute Foreclosure Proceedings.

Mortgagee or his assignee.

494. The mortgagee (g) can institute foreclosure proceedings so long as he remains entitled to the mortgage (h). After the mortgagee has assigned the mortgage security the assignee is entitled to bring the action (i), but he is subject to the state of the accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee at the date of the transfer, and also to any equities then existing in favour of the mortgagor (k).

Personal
tives.

On the death of the mortgagee, without having transferred the mortgage, the debt and security devolve upon his personal representatives, who can institute foreclosure proceedings until they have transferred the mortgage to a beneficiary or a transferee for value (l).

Co-mortgagees.

Where there are co-mortgagees they may institute proceedings jointly; or, if some are unwilling to be joined as plaintiffs, or have done some act precluding them from suing in that capacity, one can sue by himself, provided he makes all the others defendants (m); but a mortgagee entitled to part only of the mortgage money cannot sue alone and obtain foreclosure of a corresponding part of the mortgaged estate (n). Unless the advance is made on a joint account, the mortgagees are tenants in common of the mortgage money, and, on the death of one, his representatives are necessary parties (o).

Trustees.

Trustees sufficiently represent their cestuis que trust for the purpose of suing for foreclosure (p).

Puisne
mortgagee.

A puisne mortgagee can sue to foreclose the mortgagor and incumbrancers subsequent to himself (q).

Wilkin* (1836), 8 Sim. 238); though he should, if possible, be joined as plaintiff (Smith v. Chichester (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 393, 404; see Browne v. Lockhart (1840), 10 Sim. 420, 426); and usually now he would be sole plaintiff.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Parties to Proceedings.

SECT. 5.

495. The judgment in a foreclosure action gives to all persons interested in the equity of redemption the opportunity of redeeming. In default of their doing so they are foreclosed. Hence all such persons must be parties, or be sufficiently represented by persons who are parties (r).

Foreclosure or Sale.

All persons interested in equity of redemption.

Mortgagor and trustee in bankruptcy.

The mortgagor is a necessary party so long as he remains owner of the equity of redemption in the whole, or any part, of the mortgaged estate (a). On the bankruptcy of the mortgagor he is not a necessary party (b), and his trustee in bankruptcy should be joined in his place (c).

On the death of the mortgagor, the persons to be made parties in his place depend on the nature of the property and whether the death took place before the 1st January, 1898, or not (d).

Persons interested on mortgagor's death.

If the death took place before that date and the property is real estate, the heir or devisee must be a party (e), but not the personal representative (f); if, in the like case, the property is personal

Horn* (1858), 26 Beav. 195, 197 ("the parties to the mortgage deed, and those claiming under them should alone be parties to the cause"). A married woman is not entitled to enforce an equity to a settlement against a legal mortgagee, but if the equity of redemption is reserved to her and her husband, she must be a party (Hill v. Edmonds (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 603); see title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., p. 335.

(a) Moore v. Morton, [1886] W. N. 196. Similarly, where a second mortgagee sues to redeem the first mortgagee, the mortgagor is a necessary party, since on redemption the suit will become a foreclosure suit against him (Fell v. Brown (1787), 2 Bro. C. C. 276; Farmer v. Curtis (1829), 2 Sim. 466; Ramsbottom v. Wallis (1835), 5 L. J. (CH.) 92); and so where he retains the equity of redemption in part of the mortgaged estate, and the owner of the other part is seeking to redeem the first mortgagee, for such redemption must be of the whole (Palk v. Clinton (Lord) (1805), 12 Ves. 48, 59). In an action by a sub-mortgagee to foreclose the mortgagor, the original mortgagee, or his representatives, must be joined (Hobart v. Abbot (1731), 2 P. Wms. 643); but the original mortgagor is not a necessary party to a suit only between the mortgagee and sub-mortgagee (see 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 2082). As to sub-mortgages, see pp. 132, 180, ante.

As to costs of a disclaiming trustee, see ibid.; Thompson v. Kendall (1840), 9 Sim. 397). The trustee can now disclaim (see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., p. 191), or release the equity of redemption to the mortgagee (Melbourne Banking Corporation v. Brougham (1879), 4 App. Cas. 156, P. C.).

estate, or is to be treated as converted into personal estate (g), the personal representative must be a party (h), unless by assent or conveyance the property has become vested in a person claiming beneficially under the deceased, who will then be a party in the place of the personal representative (i).

If the death has taken place on or after the 1st January, 1898 (j), the personal representatives are necessary parties unless the property has by assent or conveyance become vested, according to its nature, in the heir or devisee, or other person beneficially interested (k), or the mortgaged property is of copyhold or customary tenure and the legal estate was vested in the mortgagor at his death (l). And apparently the personal representatives must be a party if the mortgagee is asking for a sale of the premises and the security is deficient (m).

496. Trustees, and executors and administrators, sufficiently represent the trust estate, or the estate under administration, and if this includes the equity of redemption it is unnecessary to join any of the beneficiaries as defendants to the action (n).

Sparke* (1820), 2 Jac. & W. 223, 229, as to mortgage by way of trust for sale, though the right of exoneration of the real estate by the personal estate, which was the ground of the decision, does not now exist. Where the personal representative is tenant for life, and is not protecting the interests of remaindermen, they must be joined (Watts v. Lane (1901), 84 L. T. 144). As to the jurisdiction of the court to appoint a person to represent the estate, see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 205.

(j) See note (d), p. 279, ante.

(k) Formerly legatees whose legacies were charged on the equity of redemption were necessary parties (Batchelor v. Middleton (1847), 6 Hare, 75, 78); but this is not now necessary if the personal representatives are parties.

(n) R. S. C., Ord. 16, r. 8, under which such persons represent the trust property, or the estate of the deceased. The proviso to the rule (which was introduced in 1893) expressly applies it to trustees, executors, and administrators who are sued in proceedings to enforce a security by foreclosure or otherwise. Formerly trustees did not represent their beneficiaries in a defence to a foreclosure action (Coles v. Forrest (1847), 10 Beav. 552, 557; Goldsmid v. Stonehewer (1852), 9 Hare, Appendix, xxxviii.; Francis v. Harrison (1889), 43 Ch. D. 183; Wavell v. Mitchell (1891), 64 L. T. 560), unless they were also executors, so as to have control of the funds required for redemption (Hanman v. Riley (1852), 9 Hare, Appendix, xl.; Sale v. Kitson (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 119, C. A.; Mills v. Jennings (1880), 13 Ch. D. 639, 649, C. A.; affirmed sub nom. Jennings v. Jordan (1881), 6 App. Cas. 698; Re Mitchell, Wavell v. Mitchell (1892), 65 L. T. 851; Re Booth and Kettlewell's Contract (1892), 62 L. J. (CH.) 40). And formerly creditors of the mortgagor who had assented to a creditors' trust deed were necessary parties (see Newton v. Egmont (Earl) (1831), 4 Sim. 574; (1832), 5 Sim. 130; Cocker v. Egmont (Lord) (1833), 6 Sim. 311; Thomas v. Dunning (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 618); but now the trustee would represent them.

497. Where the equity of redemption is settled, the first and any succeeding tenants for life in being must be made defendants, and also the first tenant in tail in being, or, if there is none, the first person entitled to the inheritance. If there is no person to represent the inheritance, it is sufficient to bring the tenant or tenants for life before the court (o).

The executors of a tenant for life against whom the remainderman has a claim in respect of arrears of interest accrued during the tenancy for life are not necessary parties (*Wynne v. (b) R. S. C., Ord. 16, rr. 8, 9, provides for representation where parties are numerous, but in Griffith v. Pound (1890), 45 Ch. D. 553, it was held that all the debenture-holders must be parties. It seems, however, that representation orders will be made in such a case (Fairfield Shipbuilding and Engineering Co. v. London and East Coast Steamship Co., [1895] W. N. 64); and in an action on behalf of first debenture-holders, a representative of subsequent debenture-holders will be appointed (*Wilcox & Co. parties to foreclosure by a prior mortgagee. A judgment creditor of the mortgagor must be joined if he has registered a writ or order affecting the equity of redemption (c). Where a partnership share is mortgaged, and by the articles of partnership the partners have a right of pre-emption over each other's shares, the other partners are necessary parties to foreclosure of the share (d).

501. The mortgagee cannot in general foreclose part only of the mortgaged property; hence if several properties are mortgaged together, and are afterwards incumbered or disposed of separately, the incumbrancers on and persons interested in the equity of redemption of each property are necessary parties to the first mortgagee's foreclosure action (e). But a puisne mortgagee of one property can foreclose those behind him on that property without making the persons, who are interested in the equity of redemption of the other property, parties to his action (f).

502. Where by bankruptcy (g) or judgment (h) there is an involuntary alienation of, or charge upon, the equity of redemption pendente lite, the trustee in bankruptcy or judgment creditor must be joined; but under a voluntary alienation the assignee is bound without being made a party (i), though if the plaintiff wishes him to be before the court he cannot object (k); and, if he has taken a legal interest, he should be a party so as to enable the court to direct a conveyance (l).

R. 8 Eq. 220, and holding that a judgment creditor is not a necessary party until he has an actual charge on the land; for this purpose he must now have registered a writ or order; see titles EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., p. 72; JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, Vol. XVIII., p. 220. If the judgment creditor registers his writ or order after judgment, he may be joined before foreclosure absolute (Re Parbola, Ltd., Blackburn v. Parbola, Ltd., supra). (e) But if the two properties are subject to separate prior mortgages, the puisne mortgagee of both can redeem one by itself, and then he may foreclose the mortgagor as to that only (see p. 155, ante), unless there is a right of consolidation in respect of the prior mortgages (Ireson v. Denn (1796), 2 Cox, Eq. Cas. 425; and see p. 151, ante).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Procedure.

SECT. 5.

Foreclosure or Sale.Form of proceedings.

503. A foreclosure action is commenced either by writ or by originating summons (m). A writ is the proper procedure where the facts are so complicated that it would be difficult to try the action satisfactorily without pleadings; or where disputes as to matters of fact or as to questions of priority are likely to arise, so that pleadings are required to ascertain the issues between the parties (n). Moreover, if a claim for payment under the covenant is joined with the claim for foreclosure, it is necessary to proceed by writ (o). Where none of the foregoing considerations is present the action should be commenced by summons (a), and on a summons the mortgagee can obtain foreclosure or sale, and, if necessary, delivery of possession by the mortgagor (b).

504. Actions for foreclosure in the High Court are assigned to the Chancery Division (c). If the mortgage does not exceed £500, the action can be brought in the county court of the district where the mortgaged property is situate (d). Court.

505. Where the mortgagee is suing for foreclosure only, the claim is that an account may be taken of what is due to him on the mortgage (which must be specifically described) for principal, interest and costs, and that the mortgage may be enforced by Claims in

(m) The jurisdiction to order foreclosure or sale on summons is conferred by R. S. C., Ord. 55, r. 5A, and applies to any mortgage, legal or equitable, including a charging order (Cohen v. Beadell (1891), 91 L. T. Jo. 250). This makes it unnecessary to apply for accounts under R. S. C., Ord. 15, r. 1. As to such applications, see Smith v. Davies (1884), 28 Ch. D. 650; Horton v. Bosson (1899), 80 L. T. 438. But apparently foreclosure nisi cannot be ordered under the latter rule (Blake v. Harvey (1885), 29 Ch. D. 827, C. A.; Bissett v. Jones (1886), 32 Ch. D. 635); though, if ordered, the order is final, and not interlocutory for the purpose of appealing (Smith v. Davies (1886), 31 Ch. D. 595, C. A.). Actions for foreclosure in respect of different mortgages by the same mortgagor can be consolidated (R. S. C., Ord. 49, r. 8; see Holden v. Silkstone and Dodworth Coal and Iron Co. (1881), 30 W. R. 98).

(n) It has been questioned whether there is jurisdiction to decide disputed questions of fact (Beamish v. Whiteney, [1908] 1 I. R. 38) on summons; but the matter seems to be one of convenience rather than of jurisdiction. As to priorities, see note (t), p. 152, ante.

(o) R. S. C., Ord. 55, r. 5A, gives no jurisdiction to order payment on summons. As to proceedings on the covenant, see pp. 267 et seq., ante.

(a) If a summons is the proper procedure the mortgagee will not be allowed the extra costs of an action by writ (O'Kelly v. Culverhouse, [1887] W. N. 36). A claim for personal payment justifies proceeding by writ, even though immediate payment is refused (Brooking v. Skewis (1887), 58 L. T. 73; and see Johnson v. Evans (1888), 60 L. T. 29).

(b) R. S. C., Ord. 55, r. 5A. As to claiming possession only, see p. 151, ante. It is no ground for proceeding by writ that a receiver is claimed, since the appointment can be made on summons (Gee v. Bell (1887), 35 Ch. D. 160; Barr v. Harding (1887), 36 W. R. 216; O'Kelly v. Culverhouse, supra; Weston v. Levy, [1887] W. N. 76).

foreclosure (e). If the mortgagee is willing to have a sale by the court, he will claim foreclosure or sale; but though foreclosure only is claimed, the court may direct a sale (f). If the mortgagee is in possession, he will ask for an account of rents and profits received and for the allowance of any special expenses (g). If the mortgagee is not in possession, and there is likely to be any difficulty as to obtaining possession, he may claim also delivery of possession (h), but this is not necessary (i). An action for foreclosure and for delivery of possession is not an action for recovery of land within the meaning of the Rules of the Supreme Court, and is therefore not subject to the special procedure prescribed for such actions (k).

The mortgagee may also include in the writ a claim for payment under the covenant in the mortgage deed (l); and if he has commenced an action of foreclosure in the Chancery Division he should not at the same time sue in the King's Bench Division on the covenant, since this relief can be obtained in the foreclosure action, and if he does so the latter action will be stayed (m).

If the mortgagee is suing to enforce by foreclosure or sale a charge created by deposit of title deeds, whether accompanied by a memorandum or not, or to enforce by sale a charge or equitable lien, he will claim in the first instance a declaration that he is to (e) The mortgagee should sue on all the mortgages and further charges he may have; if one is overlooked, the action cannot be extended to it after order for foreclosure nisi, but a fresh action on all the mortgages and charges can be brought (Bake v. French, [1907] 1 Ch. 428).

(f) See R. S. C., Appendix A, Part III., ss. 1, 4. And as to jurisdiction to order a sale, see p. 274, ante.

(g) As to what expenses must be asked for, see pp. 237, 239, ante. It is not necessary to ask for all that is required on a writ, since the claim can be amplified in the statement of claim; but a summons should ask for relief as comprehensively as a statement of claim.

(h) But if possession only is claimed, the procedure is by action for recovery of land; see R. S. C., Ord. 18, r. 2; see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII.; p. 558; and p. 151, ante.

(i) An action for foreclosure includes a claim for possession, and delivery of possession may be ordered as against the mortgagor though not asked for by the writ or summons (Manchester and Liverpool Bank v. Parkinson (1889), 60 L. T. 258), notwithstanding that the mortgagor does not appear (Salt v. Edgar (1886), 54 L. T. 374; Lacon v. Tyrrell (1887), 56 L. T. 483; Best v. Applegate (1887), 37 Ch. D. 42). The order may be made after foreclosure absolute (Keith v. Day (1888), 39 Ch. D. 452, C. A.), although not asked for by the summons (Jenkins v. Ridgley (1893), 41 W. R. 585). But delivery of possession will not be ordered ex parte where not asked for by the writ or summons (Le Bas v. Grant (1895), 64 L. J. (CH.) 368).

(l) Dymond v. Croft (1876), 3 Ch. D. 512; Farrer v. Lacy, Hartland & Co. (1885), 31 Ch. D. 42, C. A. But this claim cannot be specially indorsed under R. S. C., Ord. 3, r. 6, so as to enable summary judgment to be obtained under R. S. C., Ord. 14, r. 1 (a) (Hill v. Sidebottom (1882), 47 L. T. 224; Imbert-Terry v. Carver (1887), 34 Ch. D. 506); though if the defendant does not appear judgment may be signed under R. S. C., Ord. 13, r. 3 (Bissett v. Jones (1886), 32 Ch. D. 635). As to judgment under R. S. C., Ord. 13, r. 3, or Ord. 14, see title JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, Vol. XVIII., pp. 184, 185, 190—194.

be considered as a mortgagee, or that he is entitled to a charge or lien, and will then go on to claim an account and the enforcement of the security (n).

SECT. 5.
Foreclosure
or Sale.

506. When the action is commenced by writ, a summons for directions is taken out, and on this pleadings are ordered (o). The statement of claim should allege the following matters:—

Action by writ; statement claim.

(1) The mortgage deed (p), setting out (i.) if personal payment is claimed, the covenant for payment (q), or, if there is no covenant, the circumstances giving rise to the liability; (ii.) the nature of the security, whether for a single advance then made, or also for further advances, or to cover a current account, or otherwise; (iii.) the property mortgaged, taking care, if delivery of possession is claimed or will be required, to describe the property in accordance with the mortgage deed, since the description will be repeated in the judgment and will be the basis for a writ of possession (r); (iv.) the proviso for redemption; (v.) any stipulation for leaving the loan for a term, and any special stipulations as to expenses which may affect the taking of the accounts; and (vi.) the mortgagor's covenants, if default consists in the breach of any of them.

(2) Where there has been a transfer or devolution of a mortgage, the plaintiff's title to the mortgage; and similarly, any dealings with or devolution of the equity of redemption, so as to show in what capacities the various defendants are joined (s).

(3) The default under the proviso for redemption which gives rise to the right of foreclosure (t); generally, this will be a statement that the debt is still owing at a date subsequent to the day fixed for redemption.

(4) If the loan is for a term, and the action is brought within the term, the breach of covenant or other default which accelerates the right to bring the action (u).

(5) Any matters which affect the amount due to the mortgagee for the purpose of foreclosure, such as, where the mortgagor is bankrupt, the fact that the mortgagee has valued the security in the bankruptcy (a).

(n) See Marshall v. Shrewsbury (1875), 10 Ch. App. 250, 254; see p. 291, post.

(o) R. S. C., Ord. 30. If foreclosure is ordered in chambers on the summons for directions in the presence of the defendant and he does not object, he cannot object afterwards (Horton v. Bosson (1899), 80 L. T. 435, C. A.), though the jurisdiction to do so is doubtful. As to pleadings in a debenture-holder's action, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 386. As to filing of statement of claim where defendant does not appear, see R. S. C., Ord. 13, r. 12. As to pleading generally, see title PLEADING.

(p) Where the security is by registered charge on registered land, the registered charge and the contemporaneous deed of mortgage (if any) should both be stated; but if foreclosure is ordered on the unregistered mortgage alone the register can be rectified by cancelling the charge (Weymouth v. Davis, [1908] 2 Ch. 169).

SECT. 5.
Foreclosure
or Sale.

(6) Any matters which affect the taking of the accounts; such as, whether the mortgagee is in possession (b), and whether he has incurred any special expenditure for improvements, costs, or otherwise, which cannot be allowed without special direction. Whenever, for the mortgagee's protection, it is necessary to ask for the insertion in the order of special directions as to inquiries and allowances, a case for these should appear on the pleadings (c).

(7) If the action is brought to enforce a charge by deposit or an equitable lien, the circumstances giving rise to the charge or lien must be stated (d), and such of the foregoing matters as are relevant.

Defence.

507. The defence is subject to the general rules of pleading. So far as it is intended to contest any of the allegations in the statement of claim, the defendant must specifically either deny or refuse to admit them (e), and the success of his defence will depend on whether the plaintiff is able to prove such of the allegations denied or not admitted as are essential to his cause of action. If any question of priority arises as between the plaintiff and other incumbrancers, or as between defendants, these also should appear in the defences.

Evidence.

508. Where the action is commenced by writ, the evidence at the trial is usually by affidavit; if there is any serious dispute as to facts, it is either entirely oral, or the deponents are cross-examined on their affidavits (f). Strict proof of the execution of documents is usually rendered unnecessary by admissions in the pleadings, or under notice to admit, and the issues raised by the pleadings show what documents and facts must be proved. The originals of the mortgage deed and other relevant documents must be produced in court, and, in the case of registered land, an official certificate that there is no entry preventing an order for foreclosure (g).

Action commenced by

Evidence.

509. Where the action is commenced by summons the evidence is by affidavit, and at the first hearing of the summons before the master the plaintiff proves such of the matters as it would be necessary to allege in a statement of claim. The mortgage deed and other relevant documents should be made exhibits, but their execution need not be strictly proved (h). The defendants then have the opportunity of filing evidence in reply, and if any of the plaintiff's documents are contested he must prove them strictly.

(b) The omission to state this may affect the mortgagee's right to costs (Binnington v. Harwood (1825), Turn. & R. 477, 485).

If the defendant does not appear (i), the plaintiff must prove the execution of the mortgage deed and the default of the mortgagor, and also the amount due to him under the security, including any sums other than principal and interest, such as expenses of repairs and costs of litigation outside the foreclosure action, and, if he is in possession, he will have to account for rents and profits received (k).

SUB-SECT. 7.—The Order.

(i.) Accounts and Inquiries.

511. The order made in a foreclosure action directs, in the first instance, that the necessary accounts shall be taken, and any inquiries made which are essential to taking the accounts or required for ascertaining the rights of the parties. If the action is by writ and claims personal payment, two accounts have to be taken, since the sum recoverable on the covenant for payment and the sum which must be paid as the price of redemption are different. The former sum is limited to principal and interest, and to so much of the costs of the action as would have been incurred if it had been brought for payment only (l); accordingly the covenant account is of principal and interest, and there follows judgment for the amount certified to be due and for the apportioned taxed costs (m). The latter sum does not include expenses which the mortgagee is entitled to charge against the mortgaged property but which are not payable by the mortgagor personally (n). The mortgage account is an account of what is due to the plaintiff under and by virtue of his mortgage, and for his taxed costs of the action. In taking this account, anything which has been recovered under the order for payment is deducted and the balance due to the plaintiff is certified (o). If there is no claim for personal payment, only the mortgage account is directed to be taken (p).

(i) If the defendant appears to the writ and delivers a defence, but does not appear at the trial, it is not necessary to produce an affidavit of service of notice of trial (Baird v. East Riding Club and Racecourse Co., [1891] W. N. 144).

(k) See pp. 198, 219, ante.

(m) If the amount of debt and interest is proved, admitted, or agreed to at the trial, the mortgagee is entitled to judgment for immediate payment; otherwise an account is taken, and he is entitled to judgment for payment immediately the amount is certified; but the judge has a discretion to allow time for special reasons shown (Instone v. Elmslie (1886), 54 L. T. 730), and a month is a reasonable allowance (Farrer v. Lacy, Hartland & Co., supra; see form of judgment, ibid., p. 51). On motion for judgment in default of pleading, immediate payment will not be directed if the statement of claim asks for an account (Faithfull v. Woodley (1889), 43 Ch. D. 287). As to form of judgment where the debt is payable by instalments, see Greenough v. Littler (1880), 15 Ch. D. 93. Foreclosure or Sale.Special

Order.

order nisi.

The order contains no direction with respect to "just allowances." These are made in taking the account without express direction (q). But any matters of special expenditure which would not be included under this head must be specially allowed, and if the amount is not proved an inquiry as to them will be directed (r). The amounts so allowed are added to the mortgage account.

If the mortgagee is in possession, the order directs an account of rents and profits received by him or by any other persons by his order or for his use, or which without his wilful default might have been so received (s). The amount due from him on this account is directed to be deducted from the aggregate amount due on the mortgage account and the balance certified (t). The order also contains a direction for any further accounts and inquiries which the circumstances require, such as an account of proceeds of sale of part of the property; an inquiry as to deterioration in value, or loss through an improper sale; and an inquiry as to priority of incumbrancers (u).

Where the account is agreed, or is so simple that the sum can be ascertained in court, an order may be made without directing the amount to be ascertained by certificate of a master (a).

(ii.) Foreclosure Nisi.

512. In a foreclosure action by the mortgagee against the mortgagor alone, the order usually allows six months from the date of the master's certificate as the period within which the defendant may redeem (b). The certificate calculates further interest for six months from its date and fixes a time on the day at the expiration of the six months, and a place—usually a room at the Royal Courts of Justice—when the aggregate sum made up of the certified balance and the further interest shall be paid (c). The order directs that upon payment of this sum at the time and place appointed, the plaintiff shall reconvey the mortgaged property free from incumbrances created by him or persons claiming under him, and deliver up the title deeds to the defendant or as he appoints; but that in default of payment the defendant is to be foreclosed (d). Thus the order is not an absolute order for foreclosure, but only for foreclosure nisi, that is, unless the defendant redeems. If the mortgagee applies for possession (e) the order will direct the mortgagor to deliver up possession to him, and there will be a schedule describing the property as in the parcels in the mortgage deeds (f). Application for possession can also be made subsequently (g).

SECT. 5.
Foreclosure
or Sale.

513. Where the action is brought by a first mortgagee against a second mortgagee and the mortgagor, successive periods may be allowed for redemption, and in that case the first right of redemption is given to the second mortgagee, and in default he is foreclosed (h). The plaintiff's subsequent interest and costs are then computed and taxed, and a further three months may be allowed for the mortgagor to pay the original and additional amount, and in default he also is foreclosed (i). This completes the foreclosure contemplated by the action. But if the second mortgagee redeems, the action becomes one of foreclosure between him and the mortgagor; subsequent interest is computed on the amount paid to the plaintiff, and the ordinary account is taken of the second mortgage. The amount paid to the plaintiff, with subsequent interest, and the amount certified to be due to the second mortgagee under his mortgage and his costs, give the aggregate sum at which the mortgagor can redeem within three months, and in default he is foreclosed (k). Thus the result of the action is to clear the property of all incumbrances in favour of one of the parties to it, either the first mortgagee, the second mortgagee, or the mortgagor, according as the rights of redemption are exercised or not. The successive rights were formerly worked out on the same principle where there were third and subsequent mortgages, and the property was in the same manner cleared of all incumbrances (l), but now the excessive complication of such an order, and the delay consequent on successive redemptions, is usually avoided by giving only one time for redemption to all the puisne incumbrancers with liberty, on any of them redeeming, to apply to determine their rights inter se (m).

(h) If the mortgagor is bankrupt, and the mortgagee has valued his security, the trustee in bankruptcy is entitled to redeem at that value, and the order must show this (Knowles v. Dibbs (1889), 37 W. R. 378).

(i) But the second mortgagee must be foreclosed absolutely before proceedings are taken to foreclose the mortgagor (Whitbread v. Lyall (1856), 3 De G. M. & G. 383, C. A.; Webster v. Patteson (1884), 25 Ch. D. 626).

(m) See p. 290, post. A puisne mortgagee by voluntarily submitting to foreclosure does not necessarily lose his remedy on the covenant against the mortgagor (Worthington & Co. v. Abbott, [1910] 1 Ch. 588).

to such prior incumbrancers, and as regards this it is framed in the foregoing manner (n). Each incumbrancer subsequent to the plaintiff, and also the mortgagor, must redeem or be foreclosed; so that in the result the property is clear of the plaintiff's, and all the subsequent, incumbrances (o).

An action by the second mortgagee to redeem the first is in effect an action of foreclosure against the incumbrancers subsequent to himself and against the mortgagor. As regards the first mortgagee, the order is the same as that made in a redemption action (p). The account under the first mortgage is taken, and, if the plaintiff redeems, the order then proceeds, as in a foreclosure action, to give the subsequent incumbrancers, and ultimately the mortgagor, the chance of redeeming, and in default they are successively foreclosed (q). Thus, if the plaintiff redeems, and is not in his turn redeemed, he obtains the property free from incumbrances, at the price of the aggregate of the first mortgage and his own. If the plaintiff does not redeem, the action is dismissed with costs, and this means that he has to pay also the costs of the mortgagor (r). In an action by a mesne incumbrancer against prior incumbrancers, the right of redemption is given to the mortgagees subsequent to the first in succession, and thus all mortgagees prior to the plaintiff must redeem or be foreclosed; after redemption by any one of them those subsequent to him must likewise redeem or be foreclosed. But if the plaintiff fails to redeem, the action is dismissed. If he redeems, then the successive rights of redemption, with foreclosure in default, are continued as in a foreclosure action (s).

515. But the rights of redemption are not always preserved in the foregoing manner. The mortgagor himself is not entitled to any further period for redemption beyond the ordinary six months because he has incumbered the equity of redemption (t); and when questions of priority arise between incumbrancers which do not affect the plaintiff, these need not be determined in his presence, and hence, to avoid doing so, only one period of redemption is fixed for all the incumbrancers and the mortgagor, and the order is made without prejudice to the priority of the incumbrancers inter se (u). Similarly, where they, or some of them, do not appear, or do not put in a defence, only one period is allowed, since to do otherwise would be to fix their priorities in their absence (a).

And generally the practice now is to fix only one period of redemption (b); but subsequent incumbrancers, if their priorities are proved or admitted (though not the mortgagor), can obtain successive periods on showing a case for this indulgence (c). If any of the defendants redeem there is liberty to apply, and their respective rights will be worked out without notice to the plaintiff (d).

SECT. 5.
Foreclosure
or Sale.

516. In an action for foreclosure of an equitable mortgage by deposit, the order is prefaced by a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to be considered as a mortgagee of the premises comprised in the deeds (e); the usual accounts are directed, and in default of payment the mortgagor is foreclosed; and there is a direction for conveyance of the property to the plaintiff (f).

Foreclosure of equitable securities.

517. An order for foreclosure requires to be stamped as though it were a conveyance on sale (g), and the value for that purpose is the amount of the mortgage debt or the value of the property, whichever is less (h).

Stamp duty.

(iii.) Sale.

518. Where the primary remedy on a security is foreclosure, a sale may be ordered under the statutory jurisdiction; in other cases it is ordered under the general jurisdiction of the court as the appropriate way of enforcing the security (i). An order for sale in lieu of foreclosure follows the form of a foreclosure order in providing opportunity of redemption to the mortgagor. There is the usual order for accounts, and the direction for reconveyance to the statement of claim alleges that the defendants are "entitled," or only that they "claim to be entitled" to incumbrances (Doble v. Munday (1885), 28 Ch. D. 664); Smithett v. Hesketh (1890), 44 Ch. D. 161, 164). Where a sale is ordered, only one time is allowed for redemption if the margin for subsequent incumbrancers will be small (Cripps v. Wood (1882), 51 L. J. (CH.) 584).

For forms of order giving one period for redemption, see 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., pp. 1896, 1964, 1965. Formerly the allowance of successive periods was usual (Lewis v. Aberdare and Plymouth Co. (1884), 53 L. J. (CH.) 741), except in the case of judgment creditors (Stead v. Banks (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 560; Bates v. Hillocoat (1852), 16 Beav. 139).

mortgagor if he pays the sum certified to be due; but then, instead of directing foreclosure, the order directs a sale, payment of the proceeds into court, and application thereof in satisfaction of the plaintiff's debt. Unless a sale of the whole is necessary, or is desired by the parties, the direction is to sell the property or a competent part thereof; if, after sale of the whole, there is a deficiency, the right of the mortgagee to sue for the balance is preserved (k). The order directs whether the sale is to be made with the approbation of the judge—that is, in court—or out of court, and, in the latter case, to what extent it is to be subject to the control of the court; for example, in fixing the reserve price and the auctioneer's remuneration (l); it may direct who is to have the conduct of the sale, or this may be left to be determined in chambers (m); and where the sale is being ordered against the wish of the first mortgagee, the order will usually direct payment into court by the mortgagor or subsequent incumbrancers of a sum sufficient to protect the first mortgagee against loss, either in respect of costs or of insufficiency of price (n), and in the like case the reserve price may be fixed so as to cover the mortgage debt and costs (o). If the sale is not effected, then foreclosure will follow (p).

Inquiries.

If there are several incumbrancers and an immediate sale is desired by the parties, or is necessary, the order will direct an inquiry as to incumbrances, an account of the amounts due, and an inquiry as to priorities. There is then an order for sale, and direction for the proceeds to be paid into court and applied in payment of the incumbrances according to their priorities (q).

Equitable charges or liens.

519. Where the security is an equitable charge entitling the mortgagee to foreclosure—such as a mortgage by deposit of title deeds—and sale is directed in lieu of foreclosure, the order follows the form of a foreclosure order under such a security (r) in declaring the charge, directing an account, and giving the mortgagor opportunity of redeeming. If he redeems, the deeds are to be handed back to him; in default, the direction for sale follows (s).

Where the security is an equitable charge conferring no right to foreclosure (t), or an equitable lien, such as a vendor's lien (u), the order declares the lien, and directs, where necessary, accounts and inquiries, and sale on non-payment of the amount due (a).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Foreclosure Absolute.

SECT. 5.

Foreclosure or Sale.Procedure to obtain order.

520. Upon non-payment of the amount certified to be due at the time and place prescribed, the mortgagee is entitled to an order for foreclosure absolute as against the person or persons in default. The order is obtained upon motion or summons (b), and there must be an affidavit made by the mortgagee, or, if he attended by an agent, by such agent, of attendance at the prescribed time and place and non-payment of the money (c), and also an affidavit by the mortgagee, or by all the joint mortgagees, of non-payment since the appointed time (d).

521. The order for foreclosure absolute recites the order for an account in the order nisi, the certificate showing the sum found due, the time and place appointed for payment, and the evidence of attendance by the plaintiff or his agent and of non-payment; and orders that the mortgagor, or other defendant against whom it is made, shall thenceforth stand absolutely debarred and foreclosed of and from all equity of redemption in the mortgaged premises (e).

Form of order.

(3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 2054). If the charge is on the estate of a tenant in tail, he may be ordered to execute a disentailing deed (Lewis v. Duncombe (1855), 20 Beav. 398); and see note (h), p. 99, ante.

(b) If the order is made on motion, the matter is not mentioned to the court unless there has been some irregularity preventing the motion from being treated as of course; counsel hands his brief duly indorsed to the registrar. But usually it is made on summons in chambers (see Daniell's Chancery Forms, 5th ed., p. 778), whether the proceedings are by writ or summons (Yearly Practice of the Supreme Court, 1912, p. 833).

(c) See Docksey v. Else (1891), 64 L. T. 256. The affidavit should prove attendance by the mortgagee or his agent during the whole of the appointed time, and an agent should be authorised by power of attorney to receive the money (see form in Daniell's Chancery Forms, 5th ed., p. 777); but a want of strict compliance with these formalities is not necessarily a ground for refusing the order. The order has been granted although the mortgagee has attended during only part of the appointed time (Anon. (1844), 1 Coll. 273; Bernard v. Norton (1864), 10 L. T. 183), and although, where the attendance is by agent, the agent had not a power of attorney to receive the money, provided the mortgagor did not attend (Lechmere v. Clamp (No. 3) (1862), 31 Beav. 578; London Monetary Advance and Assurance Society v. Brown (1868), 16 W. R. 782; Macrae v. Evans (1875), 24 W. R. 55; Cox v. Watson (1877), 7 Ch. D. 196); and, a fortiori, where the agent has a power of attorney, but has omitted to bring it with him (Hart v. Hawthorne (1880), 42 L. T. 79; Crawley v. Fuller, [1890] W. N. 35). But such irregularities prevent the order being of course, and the matter must be mentioned to the judge (King v. Hough, [1895] W. N. 60). As to form of order under such circumstances, see Moore and Robinson's Nottinghamshire Banking Co. v. Horsfield, [1882] W. N. 43. And, as to an infant mortgagor, see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., p. 143.

(d) Barrow v. Smith (1885), 52 L. T. 798; Docksey v. Else, supra. But where the defendant had never appeared in the action, an affidavit by the solicitor's clerk who attended to receive the money was accepted as sufficient (Frith v. Cooke (1885), 52 L. T. 798). If one joint mortgagee is abroad, it is sufficient for the rest to make the affidavit (Kinnaird v. Yorke (1889), 60 L. T. 380). Where the mortgagee has received rents after default, the usual form of affidavit must be altered; see National Permanent Mutual Benefit Building Society v. Raper, [1892] 1 Ch. 54; and see p. 223, ante.

(e) 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., p. 1989.

SECT. 5.
Foreclosure
or Sale.

If necessary an order for delivery of possession will be added, or this may be obtained subsequently (f); and, in the case of an equitable mortgage, where a conveyance cannot be obtained from the mortgagor, he will be declared to be a trustee, and a vesting order will be made under the Trustee Act, 1893 (g). If the defendant has in his possession any deeds affecting the title to the plaintiff's mortgage, these will be ordered to be given up, but a puisne mortgagee will not be ordered to deliver up deeds, subsequent to the plaintiff's mortgage, which affect only the equity of redemption (h).

Order against infants.

522. An infant defendant is usually allowed a day to show cause against the order on his attaining majority, and accordingly in such a case the order contains a declaration that the order is not to be binding on him unless, on being served, after he has attained majority, with a subpoena to show cause against the order, he fails, within six months from service, to show good cause to the contrary (i). But if it appears that the security is deficient, and if the plaintiff offers to pay the infant's solicitor and client costs, a day to show cause is not given (k); and it is not given where the order directs a sale (l).

Effect of

523. The effect of the order for foreclosure absolute is to transfer the equitable estate of the mortgagor to the mortgagee (m), and the mortgagor has thenceforth no interest in the property. The mortgagee holds the mortgaged property as absolute owner in lieu of the mortgage money, and, if it is real estate, he holds it as such, and not as personalty (n).

(f) Keith v. Day (1888), 39 Ch. D. 452, C. A.; Manchester and Liverpool Bank v. Parkinson (1889), 60 L. T. 258; Jenkins v. Ridgley (1893), 41 W. R. 585; see p. 284, ante. The order for foreclosure absolute does not by itself entitle the mortgagee to a writ of possession (Wood v. Wheeler (1882), 22 Ch. D. 281).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Costs.

525. In a foreclosure action the costs of the mortgagee are not, in the absence of special circumstances, payable by the mortgagor personally; the mortgagee adds them to his debt, and the mortgagor only pays them if he redeems (q). And the mortgagee is not liable in general to pay the costs of any other party to the action (r). But a defendant who disclaims interest is entitled to his costs if he has been needlessly made a party to the action, or to costs subsequent to disclaimer if the action is needlessly continued against him. On this question the following rules are recognised:—

Costs added to mortgage debt.

Liability of
mortgagee.

(1) If a defendant has no interest (s), and claims no interest, at the commencement of the action or afterwards, he is not properly made a party (t), and if he disclaims either before or after (a) the commencement of the action in terms which shows this to be the case, he is entitled to his costs against the plaintiff (b);

disclaim before action, he is properly made a defendant and is not entitled to be paid his costs (e) ; but if he disclaims during the action and does not ask for costs, and is yet brought to the trial for some special purpose of the plaintiff, he is entitled to be paid his costs subsequent to the disclaimer (f), though not if he appears of his own accord without being required for such special purpose (g).

SUB-SECT. 10.—Exercise of Other Remedies while Foreclosure Proceedings Pending.

Proceedings on the covenant.

526. Since the mortgagee is entitled to pursue all his remedies concurrently (h), the pendency of a foreclosure action does not prevent him from suing on the covenant, though, if such a proceeding is intended, the claim should be joined with the claim for foreclosure in one action (i). The order will then provide for any sums recovered being credited to the mortgagor in taking the foreclosure account (k). If a separate action is brought, the sums recovered must also be brought into account (l).

power of sale.

527. The mortgagee can also exercise his power of sale, but after judgment for foreclosure nisi and before foreclosure absolute, he cannot sell without the leave of the court (m).

SUB-SECT. 11.—Opening Foreclosure.

General principle as to enlargement of time.

528. Neither the order for foreclosure nisi, which directs foreclosure in the event of non-payment at a prescribed date, nor the order for foreclosure absolute, is conclusive as regards the mortgagor's right to redeem. After the order for foreclosure nisi, whether followed by an order for foreclosure absolute or not, the mortgagor

Nicol* (1846), 9 Beav. 403. Where the action is by summons, the affidavit in reply takes the place of a defence. A statement by the defendant that if he had been applied to before action he would have released or disclaimed his right does not entitle him to costs (Collins v. Shirley (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 638 ; Ford v. White (1852), 16 Beav. 120 ; compare Gurney v. Jackson (1852), 1 Sm. & G. 97).

D. 566, 569 ; see Lewin v. Jones (1884), 53 L. J. (CH.) 1011. The disclaimer should be made immediately on notice of the action (Bradley v. Borlase (1858), 7 W. R. 125). The defendant must not plead and appear at the hearing to claim costs (Maxwell v. Wightwick (1866), L. R. 3 Eq. 210).

can apply for, and, in suitable circumstances and on certain conditions, obtain, an order enlarging the time for redemption (n), and, if there has been foreclosure absolute, opening the foreclosure and giving a new right of redemption (o); and the same results may follow from acts of the mortgagee. Enlargement of the time is not a matter of course (p). There must be some reason for it, such as that the security is ample, and that the mortgagor has a reasonable probability of obtaining the money to pay the mortgage debt (q); though on a first application before the day fixed for payment (r) the reason need not be a strong one (s).

Successive enlargements can, however, be obtained, and if there is really a strong case the application may be granted three or four times, and a further enlargement has been allowed notwithstanding that the last preceding order purported to be peremptory (a). In such circumstances there should be evidence of unexpected delay in getting the money, and a strong probability that it will be got (b). But as to an ordinary application for enlargement of time no general rule has been laid down. The matters to be taken into consideration include the nature of the estate, whether in reversion or in possession; whether the mortgaged property shows a sufficient margin to protect the mortgagee against loss; and whether the mortgagor's reasonable expectations have been disappointed (c).

As a condition of the enlargement of time the mortgagor must forthwith or within a prescribed time, usually a month (d), pay arrears of interest and costs (e), though if the arrears amount to a large sum, payment of a substantial part may be accepted (f). If the condition is not complied with, foreclosure follows (g).

529. If the mortgagor is seeking to vary the master's certificate, he should apply for an enlargement till after his application has been heard (h). If his right to redeem is in dispute, and he is appealing, the enlargement will be granted on the terms of his bringing the principal into court and paying the mortgage interest, or bringing that also into court and paying costs to the mortgagee on the latter undertaking to refund such costs if the appeal is successful (i).

530. Enlargement of time for redemption can be obtained even after the order for foreclosure absolute has been passed and entered (k); but for this a strong case must be made out, such as that the value of the estate greatly exceeds the debt, and that the delay in getting the money has been accidental (l).

531. Where under the order and certificate the debt is payable to mortgagees on a joint account, and one of them dies before the day fixed for payment, this operates as a postponement of the time for redemption, and a new day must be appointed (m).

532. The time for redemption will be enlarged if the mortgagee is in possession and receives rents between the date of the master's certificate and the day appointed for payment. Such receipt opens the account, and a fresh certificate must be made and a further day appointed (n); but after default on the day appointed for payment, the mortgagee receives the rents on his own account and the time is not thereby enlarged (o).

Receipt of rents by a receiver in the action has the same effect as receipt by the mortgagee if the mortgagee claims them, that is, the certificate is reopened if the rents are received before the day of payment, but not if they are received after (p). This is on the ground

SECT. 5.
Foreclosure
or Sale.

533. An order for foreclosure absolute will be reopened if, after foreclosure, the mortgagee sues the mortgagor on his covenant for payment (r). It will be reopened also if the mortgagee sells under his power of sale and not as absolute owner, though the effect is only to make him liable to account for the surplus proceeds of sale and the purchaser's title is not disturbed (s). Further, like any other judgment, the order can be set aside if it has been obtained by fraud (t), where, for instance, the mortgagee has misled the court as to the persons interested in the equity of redemption (a); but mere constructive fraud is not sufficient (b). The foreclosure may be reopened as against a purchaser (c), but it is not reopened and Ross Improvement Commissioners v. Osborne, [1890] W. N. 92, contra, are overruled; see National Permanent Mutual Benefit Building Society v. Raper, [1892] 1 Ch. 54; the further time allowed in these cases was one month. But the expense of a further account can be saved by the mortgagee filing an affidavit of the amount due for principal, interest, and costs, after allowing for receipts, down to the day for which notice of motion is given to fix another day for redemption (Jenner-Fust v. Needham (1886), 32 Ch. D. 582, C. A.); and the account is not reopened if in the order nisi the mortgagee submits to be charged with a certain sum in respect of rents in the receiver's hands or which may come to his hands prior to the order absolute, and if the amount received does not exceed such sum (Barber v. Jeckells, [1893] W. N. 91; Christy v. Godwin (1893), 38 Sol. Jo. 10; Simmons v. Blandy, [1897] 1 Ch. 19; compare Lusk v. Sebright, [1894] W. As to takings in the hands of a receiver and manager, see Holt & Co. v. Beagle (1886), 55 L. T. 592. When a receiver, not appointed on behalf of the mortgagee only, omits from his accounts certain rents received, this does not reopen the foreclosure (Ingham v. Sutherland (1890), 63 L. T. 614). by sale to a party to the action (d) or by the mortgagee bequeathing the security as a debt (e).

534. An application to reopen a foreclosure absolute must be made promptly (f), and the mortgagor loses his right by acquiescing in the mortgagee's ownership (g), especially if there have been dealings with or expenditure on the estate (h).

SUB-SECT. 12.—Loss of Right to Sue for Foreclosure.

535. A foreclosure action in respect of a mortgage of land is an action to recover land (i); hence it is liable to be barred and the mortgagee's title extinguished in twelve years after the last payment of any part of the principal money or interest (j); if there has been no payment of principal or interest, the statute runs from the day fixed for payment by the proviso for redemption, since that is the time when the right to bring the action accrues (k). When the mortgaged property is an interest in reversion, the statute does not run until the interest falls into possession (l). A foreclosure action in respect of a mortgage of personalty is not subject to any statutory limitation (m).

SECT. 6.—Rights in Mortgagor's Bankruptcy.

536. The bankruptcy of the debtor does not affect the power of any secured creditor to realise or otherwise deal with his security (n), and for this purpose any person holding a mortgage, charge or lien on the property of the debtor, as a security for a debt due to him from the debtor, is a secured creditor (o).

Deceased Mortgagor.*

537. In the administration of the assets of a person who has died since the 1st November, 1875, and whose estate may prove to be insufficient (s) for the payment in full of his debts and liabilities, the same rules prevail as to the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors, and as to debts and liabilities provable, as are in force for the time being in regard to bankrupts' estates (t). The judgment for administration is equivalent to the adjudication in bankruptcy (a).

Formerly a secured creditor could first prove in the administration for his whole debt and receive a dividend, and could then realise his security, and retain so much as was required to give him his full 20s. in the pound (Mason v. Bogg (1837), 2 My. & Cr. 443). A leading object of the statutory provision was to abolish this rule (Lee v. Nuttall (1879), 12 Ch. D. 61, 65, C. A.). As to the construction and effect of the statutory provision, see Re Whitaker, Whitaker v. Palmer, [1901] 1 Ch. 9, C. A.; Re McMurdo, Penfield v. McMurdo, [1902] 2 Ch. 684, C. A secured creditor can prove against a fund in court, though the appointed time for coming in has long elapsed, subject to such conditions and terms as the court sees fit to impose (Harrison v. Kirk, [1904] A. C. 1).

By Redemption.

Who may redeem.

SECT. 1.—By Redemption.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Who may Redeem.

538. Any person may redeem who is beneficially interested in the equity of redemption, or is liable to pay the mortgage debt (b).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Property Available for Redemption.

Mortgaged property primarily liable.

539. On the death of the mortgagor the mortgagee can pursue his remedies both against the mortgaged property (c) and on the covenant for payment (d). As between the persons interested in the mortgaged property and those interested in the general personal estate, the mortgaged property is liable to bear the debt (e), save that the specific legatee of pure personal property subject to a charge is entitled to have the charge paid off, or to be compensated, out of the general personal estate of the testator (f), whether the testator was personally liable for the amount or not (g).

(ii.) Where Several Mortgagors are Liable.

inter se.

540. Where several mortgagors are liable under the covenants in a mortgage, they are usually bound jointly and severally, and it is provided that, as regards the mortgagee, they shall all be treated as principal debtors (h); but between themselves they may have had the benefit of the money in specific shares, or for the purpose of a joint adventure; or one may have had the exclusive benefit of it, so as to be the principal debtor, while the others are sureties (i). In the former case they must contribute to the repayment of the debt in the proportions of their shares in the mortgage money (j), or in the joint adventure (k); in the latter case the sureties are entitled to be exonerated by the principal debtor, and, as between themselves, they must contribute equally to the debt unless it has been otherwise agreed (l).

By Redemption.

(iii.) Where Several Properties are Liable.

541. Where several properties of the same mortgagor, which have been charged with a single debt, become severed in title, they must bear the mortgage debt rateably in proportion to their respective values (m), unless, by special agreement in the mortgage itself or by declaration on the part of the mortgagor, one property has been made liable to bear the whole debt in exoneration of the others (n). The rule does not apply where one property is subject to a specific charge and the other to a general lien for the debt (o); but it applies as between real and personal property charged with the same debt (p), and it applies where additional properties are brought into the security on the occasion of further advances (a). Property which is only charged in aid of the property in the primary security is entitled to exoneration (b), but property described in a mortgage as a collateral security is not necessarily a secondary security so as to be entitled to be exonerated (c).

(a) Nature of Marshalling.

542. The doctrine of marshalling (d) applies to the case of securities, whether mortgages, charges, or liens (e). Hence, if one incumbrancer has a security on two properties of the same mortgagor (f), and another mortgagee has a security on one property

(d) See title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 142; and, for the general principle of marshalling, the cases referred to ibid., note (e); and see Galton v. Hancock (1744), 2 Atk. 430, 435, 438; A.-G. v. Tyndall (1764), Amb. 614, 615; Averall v. Wade (1835), L. & G. temp. Sugd. 252, 255.

(e) But the double creditor must have a charge or lien on both funds; if he has merely a right of set-off against the second fund, he cannot be required to abandon his charge on the first fund in favour of the second incumbrancer on that fund and rely on his right of set-off (Webb v. Smith (1885), 30 Ch. D. 192, C. A.).

(f) The securities need not have been created at the same time; they may be successive securities for the same debt (Gwynne v. Edwards (1825), 2 Russ. 289, n.).

only, the two properties will be marshalled, so as to throw the first incumbrance as far as possible on the property not included in the second security (g). But there must be two funds or securities, both originally the property of the same owner (h) ; a fund and a right of action are not marshalled (i) ; and the debts must be the debts of the same person (k).

Limitation.

The single creditor is confined to his substituted remedy against the other security ; he cannot interfere with the double creditor in the exercise of his rights (l).

When applied.

The doctrine of marshalling will be applied if at any time during the action the court sees occasion for it, although marshalling has not been claimed by the pleadings (m).

(b) In Whose Favour the Doctrine Applies.

Persons claiming by assignment for value or volunteers.

543. The doctrine of marshalling applies in favour of persons claiming one of the properties subject to the double creditor's charge, whether by assignment or charge by the mortgagor for value (n), or as volunteers under a settlement made by him (o) ; but it does not apply in favour of the mortgagor himself, and persons claiming under him otherwise than by assignment or charge, that is, his trustee in bankruptcy, his judgment creditors (p), or unsecured creditors (q), or his real and personal representatives.

Surety.

A surety who has given his property as security for a debt can require the creditor to resort to other property of the debtor comprised in the security in order to exonerate the surety's property (r) ;

(g) Lanoy v. Athol (Duke and Duchess) (1742), 2 Atk. 444, 446 ; Gibson v. Seagrim (1855), 20 Beav. 614 ; and see title EQUIT, Vol. XIII., pp. 143, 144.

(h) Douglas v. Cooksey (1868), 2 I. R. Eq. 311 ; The Chioggia, [1898] P. 1. Possibly there may be cases where the two securities have not been actually subject to the same ownership, but at least the owners of the security against which the claim is made must not be entitled to throw the paramount liability on the claimant's security (see Douglas v. Cooksey, supra).

and where an agent has pledged property, on which his principal has a lien, with property of his own as security for his own debt, the principal is entitled to have the debt thrown on the agent's property (a).

(c) Against Whom the Doctrine Applies.

544. The doctrine of marshalling applies against the owner of the two properties, if the mortgage or charge on both was created by himself; and it applies against persons claiming the property, or part of it, under him otherwise than by actual assignment or charge; that is, it applies against the mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy (b), against his judgment creditors (c), and against his real and personal representatives (d); and it applies against the wife of the mortgagor who has charged her own property for the prior debt (e). But otherwise the doctrine does not apply to the prejudice of the rights of third persons (f), and it does not apply, therefore, against persons claiming part of the property by assignment or charge, whether for value (g) or as volunteers (h), unless the assignment or charge was made at a time when the other part had already been disposed of with a right of exoneration against the double creditor's mortgage (i).

is mortgaged to B., and afterwards the other to C., there is no right of marshalling in favour of B. against C., so as to throw the whole of the first mortgage on C.'s security, notwithstanding that C. took with notice of the prior mortgages; but as between B. and C., the first mortgage is apportioned between the two estates according to their value (k), unless C.'s mortgage is expressed to be subject to and after satisfaction of both the previous mortgages, in which case B. can marshal against him (l); or unless the mortgage to B. was made on the footing that it was a first mortgage, and the mortgage to C. is subsequent in date. In the last case C. takes subject to the right of B. to exoneration out of the property retained by the mortgagor (m).

(d) Effect of Application of Doctrine.

Exoneration.

545. The application of the doctrine of marshalling usually has the effect of giving an incumbrancer a claim against a fund not comprised in his security in substitution for his claim against a fund comprised therein, but of the benefit of which he is deprived by the overriding claim of an incumbrancer on both funds (n). But the same principle is applied in cases where the person entitled to one fund or property claims, against the person entitled to the other fund or property, either complete exoneration or indemnity from or against the overriding charge, or contribution towards the charge. Whether such a claim will be allowed depends on whether the owner of the two properties prior to their severance was himself the creator of the first charge on both, or whether that charge was paramount to his title; and also on whether, upon the severance of title, he gave the part alienated or charged a right of exoneration by the part retained.

Assignment
property by mortgagor.

If the owner of both properties was himself the mortgagor and assigned one of the properties, whether for value or not, without reference to the mortgage on both (o), and he or his representatives pay it off, there is no right of contribution in his or their favour against the assignee (p); and where the assignment contains a covenant against incumbrances or for further assurance (q), or of another part is necessarily subject to the right of marshalling, but this is inconsistent with Barnes v. Racster (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 401, and other cases cited in note (k), infra.

But in a voluntary settlement a covenant for further assurance has not this effect (Ker v. Ker, supra).

where it is taken upon a representation, though only verbal, that the estate is free from incumbrances (r), this gives the assignee an equity to exoneration or marshalling which will prevail against a subsequent purchaser of the other property who does not take the legal estate for value and without notice (s).

By Redemption.

If the owner of the two properties at the time of severance was not the creator of the prior charge, but such charge is paramount to his title, then he can claim the benefit of the rule of equality as between himself and his assignee, whether for value or not, and if he or his representatives pay off the first mortgage the assignee must contribute (a); but it is otherwise if the assignor has on the assignment attached to the property assigned a right of exoneration, and the assignee is then entitled to the benefit of marshalling against the property retained until it comes to a purchaser for value without notice who obtains the legal estate (b).

Assignment of part of property subject to paramount charge.

SECT. 2.—By Discharge of Debt.

546. The mortgage debt may be discharged by payment to the mortgagee (c), or to a person authorised to receive it (d). But there must be actual payment; the giving of a cheque is not conditional payment of a secured debt so as to release the security (e). Where the advance is expressed to be made by several persons out of moneys belonging to them on a joint account, or the mortgage is made to more than one person jointly, the receipt in writing of the survivors or the last survivor of them, or the personal representatives of the last survivor, is a complete discharge for the mortgage money, notwithstanding any notice to the payer of a

(c) Although the claim for the debt may be barred in the circumstances referred to at p. 271, ante, the creditor may still, subject to certain time limits, proceed against the security; see title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., pp. 41, 42, 83, 84. As to mortgages to which the Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27) and 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), do not apply, see p. 300, ante.

(d) The authority of an agent to receive the debt may be express or implied. If the mortgagee receives interest through a solicitor acting for both parties, an authority for the solicitor to take payment of interest will be implied; but neither this, nor the possession of the mortgage deed by the solicitor, makes him an agent to receive the principal (Wilkinson v. Candlish (1850), 5 Exch. 91, 98; Kent v. Thomas (1856), 1 H. & N. 473; Jared v. Walke (1902), 18 T. L. R. 569). As to receipts in deeds produced by solicitors, see note (k), p. 171, ante, and titles SALE OF LAND; SOLICITORS. But the receipt of the mortgagee's solicitor in an action to recover the debt is a good discharge (Bourton v. Williams (1870), 5 Ch. App. 655). SECT. 2.

By Discharge of Debt.

By accord and satisfaction.

severance of the joint account (f). While the joint mortgagees are living, payment to one is a discharge of the debt at law (g), but is not a discharge of the security, save to the extent (if any) of the payee's beneficial interest (h).

The debt may be discharged by accord and satisfaction (i); where, for example, the creditor accepts some consideration in full discharge, not being payment after the debt has become due of a smaller sum than the debt (k), or where creditors mutually agree to accept a composition (l); and upon payment of such consideration or composition the security must be given up, unless, in the case of a composition, the creditor stipulates for its retention and does this with the knowledge of the other creditors (m).

By release.

A release of a debt is binding without consideration if made under seal, but otherwise must be made for consideration (n).

SECT. 3.—By Release of Security.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Right to Reconveyance and Delivery of Deeds.

Persons entitled to reconveyance.

547. Upon payment of all moneys secured by the mortgage, the mortgagee is bound to reconvey the mortgaged property and deliver up the title deeds, either to the mortgagor, if he is the person making the payment (o), or to any person interested

(f) Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 61, which only applies to mortgages made after the 31st December, 1881, and so far as a contrary intention is not expressed (ibid.); and see pp. 110, 117, ante.

But not if, under the circumstances, the mortgagees are to be treated as tenants in common (Steeds v. Steeds (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 537); and a payment to one of two trustee-mortgagees is bad in equity if the mortgagor has notice of the trust (Re Carew (1854), 4 I. Ch. R. 112, P. C.); and see title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

As to the estoppel binding the mortgagee, see note (p), p. 139, ante. The reconveyance must restore to the mortgagor the benefit of any covenant contained in the original conveyance to himself, and hence a covenant for quiet enjoyment cannot be released by the mortgagee (Thornton v. Court (1854), 3 De G. M. & G. 293, C. A.). If the mortgagee cannot reconvey, he cannot sue for the debt (Worthington & Co., Ltd. v. Abbott, [1910] 1 Ch. 588, 595; see p. 271, ante), unless he has been evicted by title paramount (Re Burrell, Burrell v. Smith (1869), L. R. 7 Eq. 399), or has sold the property under his power of sale, for less than the amount due on the security (Rudge v. Richens (1873), L. R. 8 C. P. 358).

Thus a second mortgagee who redeems is entitled to a reconveyance (q); and so is the mortgagor himself, after he has assigned the equity of redemption, if he is sued on his covenant for payment and pays the debt (r), but in this case the conveyance is made subject to such equity of redemption as may be vested in any person other than himself (s). The person claiming to redeem must at his own expense prove his title to do so (t). Where there has been a sub-mortgage, both the mortgagee and the sub-mortgagee must convey (u).

By Release
of Security.

548. In general all deeds relating to the title to the mortgaged property, including the mortgage deed and transfers of the mortgage, must be given up (a); but if the mortgage deed comprises other property, the mortgagor is entitled to a reconveyance of the mortgaged property, but not to delivery of the mortgage deed (b). The mortgagee cannot retain the deeds till payment of a sum not covered by the mortgage (c), where at the time of payment no right to tack the further sum has arisen (d).

Delivery of
title deeds.

A trustee for the mortgagee is bound to convey to the mortgagor, or to a purchaser under the power of sale, at the direction of the mortgagee, and will be liable for costs occasioned by his refusal (Hampshire v. Bradley (1845), 2 Coll. 34). As to the right of the mortgagor to call for a transfer to a third person instead of a conveyance to himself, see p. 170, ante.

If the accounts between the mortgagee and sub-mortgagee have not been settled, the mortgagor can require a reconveyance from them on payment into court of the amount due from him (ibid.). As to sub-mortgages, see pp. 132 et seq., 180 et seq., ante.

If by consent the trustees of the settlement retain it, the mortgagor is entitled to an attested copy and a covenant for production at their expense (Dobson v. Land (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 575, 581). But on a transfer to trustees the trust should not be disclosed; see p. 173, ante. Where there has been a former mortgage to the same mortgagee, followed by reconveyance, these deeds form part of the mortgagor's title and must be given up (Hudson v. Malcolm (1862), 10 W. R. 720). As to the custody of deeds during the continuance of the security, see pp. 204 et seq., ante.

(b) See Young v. Whitchurch and Ellesmere Banking Co. (1867), 37 L. J. (CH.) 186, where, however, the report is not clear as to the retention of the original conveyance; but the mortgagor would seem to have no right to get back the deed, though he would be entitled to a covenant for production (Yates v. Plumbe (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 174). Where several trust mortgages have been transferred to trustees by one deed, the mortgagor first redeeming is entitled to have the transfer deed delivered to him on giving the trustees a covenant or acknowledgment for production (Capper v. Terrington (1844), 13 L. J. (CH.) 239).

By Release of Security.

Effect of tender.

Tender of the mortgage money, though improperly refused, does not entitle the mortgagor to delivery of the deeds (e); but an order can be obtained giving him liberty to pay into court a stated sum sufficient to cover principal, interest, and the probable costs of action, and upon such payment the mortgagee will be ordered to deliver up the deeds (f).

Effect of
cumbrances.

549. If the mortgagee has notice of subsequent equitable incumbrancers, he is not bound to redeliver the deeds to the mortgagor without being satisfied that the subsequent incumbrancers have been paid off (g); nor should he reconvey without the consent of the incumbrancers, unless he makes the reconveyance subject to their rights (h).

Payment out of lunatic's
money.

550. If the payment is made out of money belonging to a lunatic the property should not be conveyed to the lunatic, but the mortgage should be transferred to his committee to be disposed of as the court may direct (i).

Effect of payment off.

551. Upon the mortgage debt being paid off, the mortgagee becomes constructively a trustee for the mortgagor; the Statute of Limitations thereupon runs in favour of the mortgagor, provided he is in possession, and in thirteen years the mortgagee's title is extinguished and the legal estate vested in the mortgagor (k).

Statutory jurisdiction to stay proceedings on payment in discharge.

552. Where the mortgagee is suing on a bond given for the mortgage debt, or is suing to recover possession of the mortgaged premises, there is statutory jurisdiction to stay the proceedings on payment to the mortgagee, or, if he refuses to receive it, by payment into court, of principal, interest and costs. Such payment is in full discharge of the mortgage, and the mortgagee may be ordered to reconvey and deliver up the deeds (l). The jurisdiction does not apply where the right of redemption is disputed by the mortgagee, or where the mortgagee claims that the premises are chargeable with other principal sums than those which appear on the face of the mortgage or are admitted by the mortgagor to be

By Release
of Security.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Mode of Reconveyance.

553. If the legal estate in freehold property is vested in the mortgagee, the reconveyance must be by deed (n), and will contain a covenant—usually implied from the mortgagee conveying “as mortgagee” (o)—that he has not incumbered. If the mortgagor is redeeming, it will be made to him for such estate as was the subject of the mortgage, and will be expressed to convey the property discharged from the mortgage debt and from all claims under the mortgage (p). If the equity of redemption is in settlement and the tenant for life redeems, he is entitled to have the legal estate conveyed to himself, and he can keep the mortgage debt alive in his own favour (q), but he will hold the equity of redemption subject to the trusts of the settlement (r); and, generally, when a person having a partial interest in the equity of redemption redeems, he holds subject to the rights of redemption of all the persons having other interests, and the reconveyance to him should show this (s). General form.

(m) Mortgage Act, 1733 (7 Geo. 2, c. 20), s. 3; Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 220. Thus the jurisdiction is confined to cases where the mortgagor is entitled to redeem on payment of principal, interest and costs; or where any further sums claimed by the mortgagee are admitted by the mortgagor (Dowle v. Neale (1862), 10 W. R. 627). It does not apply where the mortgagee is in possession so that accounts must be taken, or where he has incurred expenses—such as the costs of an abortive sale—which are not admitted (Sutton v. Rawlings (1849), 3 Exch. 407). A claim by the mortgagee disputing the right to redeem, or to additional sums, must be made by notice in writing under the hand of himself, or his agent or solicitor; it must be delivered before the money is brought into court to the mortgagor's solicitor (see Mortgage Act, 1733 (7 Geo. 2, c. 20), s. 3; Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 220); and must show clearly the nature of the claim, and in the case of additional sums must so state them as to give the mortgagor a chance of admitting them (Goodtitle d. Leon v. Lonsdown (1797), 3 Anst. 937; Doe d. Harrison v. Louch (1849), 6 Dow. & L. 270).

(p) See Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VIII., pp. 879, 882. For a reconveyance where the mortgage was of a contingent remainder, see ibid., p. 882. (q) See pp. 320, 321, post. This can be done either by taking a transfer of the mortgage debt to the tenant for life, or by inserting in the reconveyance a declaration that the mortgage is to be kept on foot for his benefit. As to transfer of mortgage, see p. 171, ante.

Change in
or equity of redemption.

Equitable mortgage.

Statutory
mortgage.

554. Where the mortgagee has died, the reconveyance will be by the person on whom the security has devolved (t).

If there has been a change in the title to the equity of redemption, the mortgagee can refuse to execute the reconveyance tendered to him if it contains incorrect recitals as to the change; but, provided all the persons entitled to the equity of redemption concur, he can be required to execute a conveyance with no recitals at all (a).

555. If the mortgage is equitable, whether because it is a puisne mortgage created by conveyance of the equity of redemption, or because it has been created by charge only, it is sufficiently discharged by an indorsed receipt. This is evidence that no money is owing on the security, and there is thereafter no interest in the property remaining in the mortgagee. But where the mortgage has been created by conveyance, a reconveyance is usually taken (b).

If the mortgage has been created in the statutory form (c) a reconveyance can be made in the statutory form of reconveyance (d).

(ii.) Copyholds.

Receipt,

surrender.

556. If a mortgage of copyholds (e) has been made by covenant to surrender not followed by surrender (f), the mortgagee obtains only an equitable interest in the lands, and the mortgage is effectually discharged by receipt for the amount due, though the lands are frequently released by deed (g). If there has been a conditional surrender (h) the mortgagee signs a warrant to the steward to enter satisfaction of the surrender on the court rolls, and this vacates the surrender (i). If there has been a surrender followed by admittance of the mortgagee (j), the mortgagee must surrender to the person redeeming, and such person will thereupon be admitted; unless the mortgagor pays the money on the day fixed by the condition, in which case he is restored to his old estate, and can re-enter without new admittance or new fine (k).

SECT. 3.

(iii.) Leaseholds.

557. If the mortgage has been created by assignment of the term, the term will be reassigned to the person redeeming in manner corresponding to a reconveyance of freeholds (l). If it has been created by subdemise, the mortgage sub-term will be surrendered for the purpose of merging in the term (m). A second mortgage by subdemise can only be got rid of by a surrender by deed; it does not become a satisfied term under the Satisfied Terms Act, 1845 (n).

Reassignment.
Surrender.

(iv.) Other Property.

558. Other property, such as a reversionary interest in personal property, is usually mortgaged by assignment, and on payment off is reassigned by deed or instrument under hand (o). Where stock has been mortgaged by joint mortgagors, the reassignment must be to, or at the direction of, all; otherwise the mortgagee will be liable for any loss thereby arising (p).

Some mortgages, instead of a proviso for reassignment, or surrender of the mortgage term, contain a proviso that on payment of the debt on the appointed day the term shall cease; in such a case it is proper to execute a deed evidencing the cesser of the term (see 2 Davidson, Precedents in Conveyancing, Part II., p. 822).

Jo. 220, 249, in the latter of which it is pointed out that where the first mortgage is by assignment, the second, though by subdemise, is equitable only; hence it can be discharged by receipt. Where the mortgage is to a building society, whether by assignment or subdemise, an indorsed receipt is sufficient to revest the premises in the mortgagor (see title BUILDING SOCIETIES, Vol. III., p. 370; 56 Sol. and the mortgage deed, with the indorsed receipt, is produced to the Registrar of Shipping, who enters the discharge in the register (q). Thereupon whatever estate passed to the mortgagee vests in the person in whom (having regard to intervening acts and circumstances, if any) it would have vested if the mortgage had not been made (r). The entry of discharge destroys the original mortgage, notwithstanding that the receipt has been given by mistake, and all subsequent entries relating to it are void (s).

(v.) Satisfaction of Registered Charges.

In the case of registered
land.

560. In the case of a registered (t) charge, the registrar, on the requisition of the registered proprietor of the charge, or on due proof of the satisfaction thereof, notifies the cessation of the charge on the register by cancelling the original entry or otherwise, and thereupon the charge is deemed to have ceased (u). A similar procedure applies to the satisfaction of incumbrances existing at the time of first registration of which notice has been entered on the register (v), and in each case notification of part discharge of the debt can be made (x). Where there has been a conveyance of the legal estate to the mortgagee, this should be reconveyed.

In Middlesex.

In Yorkshire.

561. Where a mortgage or charge has been registered in Middlesex (a), its discharge is noted by the registration of a memorial of the instrument of discharge (b); where it has been registered in Yorkshire (c), the entry of discharge is made in accordance with the rules for the time being made by the county authority (d).

(q) The registrar has no authority to erase the entry of the mortgage (Chasteauneuf v. Capeyron (1882), 7 App. Cas. 127, 135, P. C.). As to such mortgages, see pp. 133, 134, ante.

562. There is chargeable (e) on the reconveyance or discharge a stamp duty of 6*d.* for every £100, and any fractional part of £100 of the total amount or value of the money at any time secured (f); but this is chargeable only when the reconveyance or discharge wholly frees the subject of the security therefrom (g). Where there is a reconveyance of part only of the property, whether on payment off of part of the mortgage debt or not, the ad valorem duty does not apply, and the deed must be stamped with 10*s.*, but if the total amount is less than £2,000 a stamp ad valorem on the whole amount secured is accepted on the partial reconveyance (h). Subsequently, upon discharge or reconveyance on payment of the balance, the ad valorem duty on the whole amount at any time secured is payable (g).

563. The ad valorem duty is only chargeable on instruments which operate directly to discharge or put an end to the security. A mere receipt for principal, interest and costs has this effect, but only indirectly, as furnishing evidence that the mortgage debt has been paid. Hence it is sufficiently charged with 1*d.*, and if it does not extend to costs and is indorsed on the mortgage, it is exempt from stamp duty altogether (i). Receipt.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Vesting Order instead of Reconveyance (j).

564. Where a lunatic, solely or jointly, is seised or possessed of land, or is entitled to a contingent right in land, by way of mortgage, the judge in lunacy may, by order, vest or release the land in or to such person or persons as the judge directs; or a person may be appointed to convey the land or to release the right (k). A vesting order as to copyhold land, if made with the lord's consent, vests the land without surrender or admittance; if the lord does not consent, an order for conveyance will be made, and will be carried out by surrender and admittance (l). The Lunacy Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 40), which transfers to the High Court the lunacy jurisdiction as to vesting orders, excepts the case of lunatic mortgagees not being also trustees; see, further, title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

Where a lunatic is solely entitled to any stock or chose in action by way of mortgage, an order may be made vesting in any person or persons the right to transfer the stock or to sue for the chose in action (m).

Infants.

565. Where the mortgagee is an infant, an order vesting the land, or releasing or disposing of his contingent right in the land, can be made in like manner as in the case of an infant trustee (n).

Vesting orders under the Trustee Act,
1893.

566. Where a mortgagee of land has died, a vesting order in favour of such person or persons, and for such estate as the court may direct, can be made (o): (1) where an heir or personal representative or devisee of the mortgagee is out of the jurisdiction and cannot be found; (2) where any such person, on demand made by a person entitled to a reconveyance, refuses to convey; (3) where it is uncertain which of several devisees was the survivor; (4) where it is uncertain as to the survivor of the devisees, or as to the heir or personal representative of the mortgagee, whether he is living or dead; and (5) where there is no heir or personal representative to a mortgagee who has died intestate as to the land, or it is uncertain who is his heir or personal representative or devisee (p). For the order to be made it is necessary that the mortgagee shall have died without having gone into possession, and that the mortgage money shall have been paid to a person entitled to receive it, or that such person consents to an order for the reconveyance of the land (q).

(n) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 28. This jurisdiction applies where a lunatic mortgagee is an infant (Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 143). The same provision for infants is made as to copyhold land as where the mortgagee is a lunatic (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 34). The order may be made subject to legacies charged by the mortgagor's will on the equity of redemption (Re Ellerthorpe (1854), 18 Jur. 669); and see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., pp. 83, 84. The necessity for vesting orders in the case of infants has almost disappeared now that mortgaged freehold property devolves on the mortgagee's personal representatives; see note (q), p. 182, ante, and p. 185, ante. A vesting order as to stocks and choses in action vested in an infant mortgagee can hardly, in practice, be required, and is not provided for.

(o) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 29, replacing the Trustee Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60), s. 19. The provisions in respect to "heirs or devisees" can now rarely be required (see p. 182, ante), except in the case of copyhold land (see pp. 184, 185, ante), and the reference to personal representatives was introduced to meet the usual case of the mortgaged property devolving upon them. The powers of the Act can be exercised, subject to any special limits as to jurisdiction, by a palatine court or a county court (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 46; County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 67). As to when proceedings in the county court must be taken, see ibid., s. 75; and title COUNTY COURTS, Vol. VIII., pp. 444, 452. The jurisdiction extends to all land and personal estate in the British dominions except Scotland (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 41; extended to the High Court in Ireland by the Trustee Act, 1893, Amendment Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 10), s. 2).

(p) The uncertainty may arise from delay in probate owing to the will being disputed (Re Cook's Mortgage, [1895] 1 Ch. 700).

(q) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 29. But where the mortgagee has been in possession, the order can be made under ibid., s. 26, since on his being paid off he and his representatives are trustees for the mortgagor (Re Skiller's Mortgage Trust (1856), 4 W. R. 791). Where a mortgage

Instead of making a vesting order the court may appoint a person to convey (r).

Generally, where a mortgage has been paid off, the mortgagee is a trustee for the mortgagor, so that a vesting order can be made under the appropriate statutory provision or a person may be appointed to convey (s).

A vesting order can be made on the application of any person interested in the equity of redemption, whether under disability or not, or of any person interested in the money secured by the mortgage (a).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Costs of Reconveyance.

567. The costs of reconveyance are borne by the mortgagor (b), including not only the ordinary costs where the mortgage title has not been changed by assignment (c), or devolution, but also any extraordinary costs rendered necessary by a change of title or other event, such as the costs of obtaining a vesting order where the person who should reconvey cannot be found, or is under disability (d), or where the legal estate is in a trustee-mortgagee who has absconded (e); but not the costs of a vesting order where the mortgagee himself has become lunatic, these, whether the vesting order is obtained on the application of the mortgagor or the committee, being paid out of the lunatic's estate (f); nor costs of freeholds is by way of trust for sale, and the trusts of the surplus proceeds are for the mortgagor and his personal representatives, it is not a mere security for money, but changes the devolution, and the mortgagee is a trustee for the purpose of making a vesting order (Re Underwood (1857), 3 K. & J. 745; compare Re Keeler's Mortgage Trust (1862), 32 L. J. (CH.) 101). But payment to two out of three joint mortgagees does not make the third a trustee so as to enable a vesting order to be made (Re Osborn's Mortgage Trusts (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 392), unless he is already a trustee and a new trustee has been appointed (Re Walker's Mortgage Trusts (1876), 3 Ch. D. 209). See, further, as to vesting orders, title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES; and, as to the practice, R. S. C., Ord. 54B. As to forms of order, see 2 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 6th ed., pp. 1230 et seq.

The words "by such persons" overrule Re Sparks (a Person of Unsound Mind) (1877), 6 Ch. D. 361, C. Where the deeds have come into the custody of the court in the course of the reasonable and proper administration of the mortgagee's estate, the costs of getting them out must be paid by the mortgagor (h), but not if the advance was made by the executors and the mortgagor had no notice of their character or of the action (i).

SECT. 4.—By Merger.

SUB-SECT. 1.—When Merger takes Place.

(i.) In General.

Nature of principle.

568. When a charge on land and the ownership of the land become united in the same person the charge is at law merged in the ownership (k), but in equity merger does not necessarily follow upon the union of these two interests, and the equitable rule now prevails (l).

With one exception (m), merger is in equity a question of intention, and this intention may be actual or presumed (n). Even not extend to the case of a lunatic heir-at-law of the mortgagee (Re Stuart, Ex parte Marshall (1859), 4 De G. & J. 317, 319; Re Jones (1860), 7 Jur. (N. S.) 115, C. A.). The application for a vesting order should be made by the committee (Re Wheeler (1852), 1 De G. M. & G. 434), and should not be served on the mortgagor (Re Rowley (1863), 1 De G. J. & Sm. 417, C. A.), and even if served the mortgagor will not be allowed his costs of appearing out of the lunatic's estate (Re Phillips (1869), 4 Ch. App. 629). Where the mortgagee is a trustee, but the mortgagor has no notice of the trust, the exception applies, and the costs of a vesting order are paid, as between the lunatic's estate and the trust estate, out of the latter (Re Townsend (1850), 1 Mac. & G. 686; Re Jones (1876), 2 Ch. D. 70, C. A.). It was held in Re Lewes (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 23, that where the mortgage disclosed the trust, the costs were payable by the mortgagor, but there is no ground for this distinction.

(m) The excepted case is where the owner of land pays off a charge which he is personally liable to pay, as he is not allowed to set up the charge against subsequent incumbrancers to whom he is liable; see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 148; Otter v. Vaux (Lord) (1856), 6 De G. M. & G. 638, 642; Platt v. Mendel (1884), 27 Ch. D. 246, 251. But he may do so when he has been discharged by bankruptcy from personal liability (Re Howard's Estate (1892), 29 L. R. Ir. 266, C. A.); and where the first mortgage is also secured on property other than that of the person redeeming, it may be kept alive as to such other property (Taws v. Knowles, [1891] 2 Q. B. 564, 572, C. A.).

though a charge is expressed to be extinguished, it may be treated as still in existence for the protection of the person finding the money to pay it off (o); and where it has been extinguished under a misapprehension of title it may be treated as in existence if this will be more in accordance with the general intention of the owner (p).

Further, since merger depends on intention, and not on the mere legal union of the charge and the estate, it may take place although the charge is supported by an outstanding legal estate (q). For merger to take place it is sufficient that the beneficial interest in the charge and the beneficial estate in the land meet in the same person, whether in either case they are accompanied by the legal interest or estate or not (r).

SECT. 4.

Applied in accordance with intention.
Union of beneficial interests sufficient.

(ii.) In Particular Cases.

569. The presumption in favour of merger arises when the absolute interest in the charge is united with the estate in fee simple in the land, whether the owner of the land acquired the charge before (s), or at the same time as (t), or after (a) he became entitled to the land, unless such estate is subject to an executory devise or is otherwise defeasible (b), or the title is in dispute (c). There is no advantage in keeping the charge alive (d), and its extinguishment simplifies the title to the land (e). It is the same when the charge

"Where the owner has an absolute interest in the estate and the charge, the charge is annihilated for the benefit of the estate and heir. The Court does not consider the subtleties of mergers, but discharges the estate from the incumbrance; it would otherwise burden estates to no purpose" (*Donisthorpe v. is vested in a tenant in tail in possession (f), unless he is by statute forbidden to bar the entail (g). He has an immediate estate of inheritance (h), and has it in his power to become tenant in fee simple (i), and if he does not do so it is presumed that he intended the heir in tail or remainderman to take free from the charge (j).

The presumption in favour of merger arises in the foregoing cases not only where the charge and estate devolve upon the same person, but also where the owner of the estate purchases (k), or pays off (l), the charge. But where a charge becomes vested in an owner whose estate is in remainder, and may, having regard to the prior limitations, never fall into possession, a distinction exists according as he acquires the charge by actual payment or otherwise. This may happen where the owner is tenant in tail in remainder after a tenancy in tail. There is in neither case any merger so long as the estate continues in remainder, but when it falls into possession reference is made to the intention, expressed or presumed, at the time of acquiring the charge. In the absence of any indication to the contrary, this is presumed to continue at the moment when merger might take place. If the charge was acquired by actual payment the presumption is against merger, since an owner in remainder, whose estate may never fall into possession, cannot be supposed to intend to benefit the inheritance (m); but if the charge was acquired otherwise, the usual presumption arises, and when the estate falls into possession the charge is merged (n).

570. The presumption is against merger when a tenant for life or other limited owner (not being tenant in tail (o)), acquires or pays off a charge, since the merger would operate as a gift to those in remainder (p); and also when the charge is subject to limitations which prevent the full union of the charge and the estate in the lifetime of the owner; where, for example, the charge is subject to a prior life interest which does not terminate during the life of the administration to him (Re French-Brewster's Settlements, Walters v. French-Brewster, [1904] 1 Ch. 713).

(m) Wigzell v. Wigzell (1825), 2 Sim. & St. 364, 369; Horton v. Smith (1858), 4 K. & J. 627. The same principle would apply to an estate in fee in remainder which may never fall into possession.

This presumption against merger has been held to exist notwithstanding that the reconveyance to the tenant for life was expressed to be "absolutely discharged from the mortgage debt" (Gifford (Lord) v. Fitzhardinge (Lord), [1899] 2 Ch. 32).

owner in fee simple (q), or is subject to a charge for succession duty, so that the right to the charge is not absolute or co-extensive with the right to the land (r). Hence, in such cases it is not necessary to take an assignment of the charge (s), or to prove any intention on the part of the tenant for life to keep the charge alive (t).

Where the tenant for life has had an ultimate remainder in fee simple, which, by the failure of intermediate estates, falls into possession on his death, there is no merger. The presumption against merger raised by his tenancy for life continues in the absence of any proof to the contrary (a).

By Merger.

(iii.) Sufficient Rebuttal of Presumption in favour of or against Merger.

571. The foregoing rules as to the presumption in favour of or against merger yield to the intention, which, with the exception presently noticed, may be actual or presumed (b). The actual intention is to be gathered either from express declaration or the acts of the party; the presumed intention by considering what is most for his benefit (c).

Rules as to presumption yield to intention.

572. The clearest way of causing or preventing merger is by express declaration in the instrument which effects the union of the charge and the estate (d). Where there is such a declaration against merger, it is not necessary, as is sometimes done (e), to take a conveyance either of the charge or of the estate to a trustee so as to prevent a merger at law (f). But even an express declaration against merger will not keep the charge alive if there are circumstances pointing conclusively to merger (g).

Express

(c) Tyrwhitt v. Tyrwhitt (1863), 32 Beav. 244, 249. This applies both to the original presumption and to the rebutting presumption. When a tenant in fee simple pays off a charge, the original presumption is in favour of merger. Where under the circumstances it is for his advantage to keep the charge alive, there may be a rebutting presumption which prevents merger; but see Manks v. Whiteley, [1912] W. N. 87, C. A. As to infant owners, see p. 323, post.

(d) See Re Gibbon, Moore v. Gibbon, [1909] 1 Ch. 367, 373. Although the declaration is expressed to keep the charge alive for the benefit of the owner, "his heirs and assigns," it will pass on his death as personal estate (ibid.); and where, subsequently to a proviso in a conveyance of the land that the land is to be the primary fund for payment of the charge, the grantor pays it off, it will be kept alive as part of his personal estate (Pears v. Weightman (1856), 2 Jur. (N. S.) 586); compare (Johnson v. Webster (1854), 4 De G. M. & G. 474).

(e) Bailey v. Richardson (1852), 9 Hare, 734, 736.

(f) This follows a fortiori from the cases which allow merger to be rebutted by evidence of intention derived from the circumstances, without express declaration, although there is no intervening trustee (Watts v. Symes (1851), 1 De G. M. & G. 240, C. A.; Adams v. Angell (1877), 5 Ch. D. 634, C. A.).

By Merger.

Intention inferred from circumstances attending union.

Or from indications occurring subsequent to union.

Presumption where merger not beneficial to owner.

573. Where there is no express declaration, an actual intention can be inferred from the circumstances attending the union of the charge and the estate. The contemporaneous transfer of the charge to a trustee is one of the grounds on which an actual intention can be inferred and the presumption in favour of merger rebutted (h). Such a transfer is not, indeed, of itself decisive against merger (i), but, if accompanied by a declaration by the owner that the charge is to be held for him and his personal representatives, and if there are not contrary indications, it will probably be conclusive (k).

In cases where the union of the interests takes place otherwise than by the intended acquisition of the charge or estate, or payment off of the charge, so that no indications of intention can exist at the time of union, it is permissible to rely on any such indications occurring subsequently during the life of the owner (l), and merger will be prevented by any acts done by him which are only consistent with the charge being kept on foot (m). Similarly, merger will be effected where the owner has disposed of the land free from incumbrances, whether by sale (n), or mortgage (o), or marriage settlement (p). In such cases he cannot set up the charge notwithstanding a clear expression of intention to keep it alive at the time he took it (p). There will also be a merger where he has devised the estate in such a manner as to show that he treated the charge as non-existing (q). But where a tenant for life pays off an incumbrance, intending to discharge the inheritance, he cannot afterwards revive it (r).

574. Where there is no evidence of any actual intention, an intention to keep the charge alive, notwithstanding that it would (n) Bulkeley v. Hope (1855), 1 K. & J. 482, 489. Apart from intention, the vendor, if he has agreed to sell free from incumbrances, cannot afterwards maintain as against the purchaser that a charge subsisting in lieu of land tax has not merged (ibid.); see title SALE OF LAND. But in Neame v. Moorsom (1866), L. R. 3 Eq. 91, general words in a settlement did not include such a charge.

(q) See Hood v. Phillips, supra; Re Lloyd's Estate, [1903] 1 I. R. 144, 149. But a devise of the estate in such terms as to merge charges will not merge them so far as they form a security for subsequent charges made by the owner (Re Nunn's Estate (1888), 23 L. R. Ir. 286, 300, C. A.).

(r) Morley v. Morley (1855), 5 De G. M. & G. 610, 626; Re Godley's Estate, [1896] 1 I. R. 45, 52.

prima facie merge, may be presumed where this is for the benefit of the owner(s); where, for example, the merger of the charge would let in subsequent charges(t), unless such subsequent charges have been created by the owner himself(a).

By Merger.

575. The fact that the owner of the estate is ignorant of his rights prevents him from having any actual intention as to merger, but none the less the presumed intention may operate, according to the circumstances, either to effect or to prevent merger(b). Similarly, where the owner is under incapacity, the question of merger ordinarily depends technically on the presumed intention, but actually on considering what is most advantageous to him(c). Where, indeed, personal estate of an infant or lunatic tenant in fee simple or tenant in tail is used to pay off a charge on the real estate, there is no merger(d); but where the charge and the estate are united in an infant or lunatic otherwise than by payment the usual presumptions apply(e).

Presumed intention operative notwithstanding owner's ignorance of rights or incapacity.

576. Primâ facie where a mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption, or where, on a purchase, part of the purchase-money is applied in paying off a mortgage, or where the mortgage and the equity of redemption become united by purchase in the same person, the mortgage is merged in the land(f); but the person thus entitled to both interests can have the mortgage kept alive for his benefit(g). A person advancing money to pay off a charge is entitled to have the charge kept alive and transferred to himself(h); and such a transfer should be a transfer both of the debt and the security(i). For want of taking this precaution subsequent incumbrancers may gain priority(j).

The result is in fact based directly on the advantage to the owner, but technically it is based on the presumed intention (Grice v. Shaw (1852), 10 Hare, 76, 80; Byam v. Sutton (1854), 19 Beav. 556, 562).

(d) The ordinary presumption as to merger gives place to the rule that the infant's property is not to be converted so as to affect the rights of his real and personal representatives (Ware v. Polhill (1805), 11 Ves. 257, 278; Alsop v. Bell (1857), 24 Beav. 451, 468); see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XXII., p. 84. Formerly, since an infant could dispose by will of personal estate, it was for his advantage to keep the charge alive, and merger was prevented on this ground (Thomas v. Kemys (1697), 2 Vern. 348; Compton (Lord) v. Oxenden (1793), 2 Ves. 261, 264; Forbes v. Moffatt, supra). Acquisition of charge by purchaser of equity of
redemption.

577. Where the purchaser of the equity of redemption holds or gets in a mortgage upon it, or where the purchase-money is applied in paying off a mortgage, the question of merger should, upon the principles stated above, depend on his intention, actual or presumed. The creator of a charge cannot himself keep it alive against his own subsequent incumbrances, even by express declaration (k); and where the purchase is on the terms that the debts due to the purchaser and other mortgagees shall be paid off, the purchaser's own debt is extinguished (l). Apart, however, from special circumstances, the purchaser stands in a different position from the mortgagor himself, and there is no reason why he should not have the benefit of the presumption that a mortgage which he holds or pays off will be kept alive if this is for his advantage. He is entitled to keep the mortgage alive as against subsequent incumbrances by an actual intention to that effect, and such intention can be proved, as in other cases, either by express declaration or from the circumstances of the transaction, and it may be immaterial that the mortgage is expressed to have been paid off (m). And as against subsequent incumbrances of which he had no notice, actual or constructive, when he acquired the equity of redemption, he is entitled to the benefit of the usual rule; it is for his advantage that the charge should be kept alive, and it has been said that an intention against merger is presumed accordingly (n). Yet, as against incumbrances of which he had notice, either actual or constructive, there is authority that no intention against merger mortgage, was for the purpose of the purchase of the land free from such mortgage, and the mortgage was extinguished. If this case is correct—which is doubtful (see Stevens v. Mid-Hants Rail. Co., London Financial Association v. Stevens (1873), 8 Ch. App. 1064, 1069)—it must be on the ground that the new mortgagee had so dealt with the prior mortgage as to prevent its being afterwards set up by him; see Squire v. Ford (1851), 9 Hare, 47, 60. Ordinarily one who advances money to pay off a charge becomes in equity a transferee of the charge and intends to keep it alive; see Patten v. Bond (1889), 60 L. T. 583; Chetwynd v. Allen, [1899] 1 Ch. 353; Butler v. Rice, [1910] 2 Ch. 277; and see p. 180, ante.

But the trustee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor, who acquires a charge on the estate, is entitled to hold the charge for the benefit of creditors (Squire v. Ford, supra, at p. 60; Adams v. Angell (1877), 5 Ch. D. 634, 647, C. A.; Cracknall v. Janson (1877), 6 Ch. D. 735; Bell v. Sunderland Building Society (1883), 24 Ch. D. 618).

The rule equally applies where a new mortgagee is making an advance to pay off the old mortgage, and an intention to keep the old mortgage alive may be gathered from the circumstances (Phillips v. Gutteridge (1859), 4 De G. & J. 531, C. A.; Butler v. Rice, [1910] 2 Ch. 277; compare Crosbie-Hill v. Sayer, [1908] 1 Ch. 866, 877, where, however, it seems to have been assumed that the presumption was against merger, and that the charge is kept alive unless an intention is shown to merge it).

will be presumed; and if this is correct, merger can only be prevented in such a case by proof of actual intention (o).

SECT. 4.
By Merger.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Merger of Lower in Higher Security.

578. As a general rule a person, by taking or acquiring a security of a higher nature in legal operation than one he already possesses, merges and extinguishes his legal remedies upon the inferior security or cause of action; thus the taking a bond or covenant, or the obtaining a judgment for a simple contract debt, merges and extinguishes the simple contract debt (p). But for this purpose the superior security must be co-extensive with the inferior security and between the same parties (q); and a security, given by

General rule.

(o) Toulmin v. Steere (1817), 3 Mer. 210. GRANT, M.R., ibid., at p. 224, enunciated the rule that the purchaser of "an equity of redemption cannot set up a prior mortgage of his own, nor, consequently, a mortgage which he has got in, against subsequent incumbrances of which he had notice," the notice in that case being constructive. But to a certain extent this is clearly wrong, and the purchaser can by actual intention keep alive a charge which he has got in, or which he has paid off, against charges of which he has notice (Adams v. Angell (1877), 5 Ch. D. 634, C. A.). This leaves Toulmin v. Steere, supra, only as an authority that, in the absence of actual intention, whether expressed or shown by the circumstances, the presumption against merger will not apply in his favour, and beyond this it will not be extended (Stevens v. Mid-Hants Rail. Co., London Financial Association v. Stevens (1873), 8 Ch. App. 1064; Adams v. Angell, supra). But even to this extent it is opposed to principle. There is no reason for giving the second mortgagee a benefit at the expense of the purchaser of the equity of redemption who is under no liability to pay him (Stevens v. Mid-Hants Rail. Co., London Financial Association v. Stevens, supra); and the decision has been frequently questioned (see e.g., Watts v. Symes (1851), 1 De G. M. & G. 240, 244, C. A.; Thorne v. Cann, [1895] A. C. 11, 16). In Liquidation Estates Purchase Co. v. Willoughby, [1896] 1 Ch. 726, C. A., LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 734, seems to have regarded it as overruled by the dicta in Thorne v. Cann, supra, and it would perhaps have been formally overruled by the House of Lords in Liquidation Estates Purchase Co. v. Willoughby, [1898] A. C. 321, had the question of merger really arisen. But in Manks v. Whiteley, [1911] 2 Ch. 448, PARKER, J., at p. 462, regarded it as binding on a court of first instance, though not to be extended beyond the actual case, and not to be applied, therefore, to the case of a person who had paid off a first mortgage, and thereby become equitable assignee, taking a new legal security; see ibid., p. 463; and the Court of Appeal (COZENS-HARDY, M.R., and BUCKLEY, L.J., MOULTON, L.J., dissenting), [1912] W. N. 87, C. A., accepted Toulmin v. Steere, supra, and, reversing PARKER, J., held that it applied to the case in question, and that, having regard to the mode of conveyancing, the first mortgage was extinguished. But the dissentient judgment of FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., taken with the previous criticisms of Toulmin v. Steere, supra, leaves it extremely doubtful whether that decision is sound. In the Privy Council the doctrine of Toulmin v. Steere, supra, has been held not to be applicable in a court administering rules of justice, equity and good conscience, apart from technical conveyancing considerations (Gokuldoss Gopaldoss v. Rambux Seochand (1884), L. R. 11 Ind. App. 126).

(p) Owen v. Homan (1851), 3 Mac. & G. 378, 407; affirmed (1853), 17 Jur. 861, H. L.; as to judgments, see title JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS, Vol. XVIII., p. 209; pp. 226, 288, ante; and, as to interest recoverable, see pp. 226, 227, ante; and title ESTOPPEL, Vol. XIII., pp. 334 et seq. A judgment does not prevent a petition in bankruptcy on the original debt (title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., p. 39; Re Mostyn, Ex parte Griffiths (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 147, C. A.).

By Merger. merge the simple contract debt (r).

judgment.

579. The obtaining of a judgment for the mortgage debt does not, while the judgment remains unsatisfied (s), prevent the mortgagee from enforcing his security (t); and a judgment on a debt secured by equitable mortgage does not deprive that mortgage of its priority, notwithstanding that the judgment operates as a legal charge on the land (t). But taking a conveyance of part of the lands extended under an elegit in satisfaction of part of the debt is a satisfaction of the judgment altogether (a).

Effect of legal mortgage on equitable charge.

580. A mere charge created by deposit of deeds is extinguished by the taking of a formal mortgage, even though the mortgage does not pass the legal estate, and the sum thenceforth secured is the sum mentioned in the mortgage, notwithstanding that other sums were covered by the deposit (b). But where a charge on two estates is kept alive in equity in favour of a person paying it off, he does not lose the benefit of the charge by taking a mortgage of one estate (c), and an equitable security is not merged by taking a security which is ineffectual (d).

Merger must not be opposed to the contract.

581. A security will not be merged if such merger would be opposed to the contract between the parties; thus an assignment made by way of further security cannot prejudice the continuance of any existing security for the same debt (e); and a mortgage is not merged by the taking of a new mortgage on the same property to cover the original debt and further advances (f).

C.); and an agreement under seal to execute a mortgage to secure a simple contract debt turns it into a specialty debt (Saunders v. Milsome (1866), L. Part X.—Priority of Mortgagees.

SECT. 1.—As between Mortgagees of Land.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Effect of Possession of Legal Estate.

582. A mortgagee of land who advances his money without notice of an earlier equitable incumbrance, and who obtains the legal estate in the land at the time of the advance, is entitled by virtue of his legal estate to priority over the earlier mortgage (g). If he is plaintiff his legal title gives him an effective title at law (h), and equity, if there is no special reason for postponing him, in this respect follows the law (i); and he is entitled to foreclosure and other equitable remedies (k). If he is defendant he can set up the plea of purchase for value without notice, and this, combined with his legal estate, renders his position impregnable (l); and the like efficacy attaches to his legal estate in whatever manner the question of priority arises (m).

The effect is the same if a mortgagee, though he does not get the legal estate at the time of his advance, obtains the better right to call for it; where, for instance, he advances his money to pay off an existing legal mortgage on the understanding that he shall have the legal estate (n), or where the legal estate is held in trust for him (o). But an equitable mortgagee with an undertaking for a legal mortgage is not, by virtue of such undertaking, entitled to priority over a subsequent mortgagee without notice who actually obtains the legal estate (p).

Provided the legal estate is got in at the time of the advance, the mortgagee has priority over all equitable interests then existing of which he has not notice, even though the conveyance to him is made by a trustee in breach of trust (q).

A mortgagor of leaseholds, who makes a first mortgage by subdemise, and then assigns the term to another mortgagee, conveys a legal interest to the latter which gives him priority over an earlier equitable incumbrance (Re Russell Road Purchase-Moneys (1872), L. R. 12 Eq. 78; but this seems to have been doubted in the Court of Appeal, ibid., at p. 86); and see p. 127, ante. SECT. 1.

As between Mortgagees of Land.

Valid defence of purchase for value without notice.

Legal estate acquired after mortgage.

583. To sustain the defence of purchase for value without notice (r), the legal mortgagee must allege that the mortgagor was or pretended to be entitled to the mortgaged property (s); if the mortgage was of an immediate estate, that the mortgagor was in possession (t); that there was an actual conveyance, not merely an agreement for a conveyance (a); the consideration (b); and that it was actually paid, and not merely agreed to be paid (c); and the defence must deny notice of the plaintiff's charge at the time of payment of the money (d).

584. If a mortgagee does not get the legal estate at the time of his advance, and has then no notice of an earlier equitable mortgage, he may get it in afterwards, and use it for his protection in the manner above stated (e), and it is immaterial that he has had notice of the earlier mortgage in the meantime (f). But this rule is subject to the limitation that he cannot protect himself by the legal estate if the conveyance to himself is a breach of trust, and if he has notice of such breach (g). Apparently the same limitation applies if the trustee who conveys to him has notice of the breach of trust, although he himself has not (h).

(r) As to this plea, which is now confined in practice to the case of a legal mortgagee or other purchaser who relies on his legal estate against an earlier equitable incumbrancer, see, further, title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 76—79.

(s) Head v. Egerton (1734), 3 P. Wms. 280, 281; Story v. Windsor (Lord) (1743), 2 Atk. 630. Since pretence of title is sufficient, the plea is available for a purchaser from one falsely asserting title, provided he in fact gets the legal estate without notice of the title of the true owner (Jones v. Powles (1834), 3 My. & K. 581; Carter v. Carter (1857), 3 K. & J. 617, 638; Young v. Young (1867), L. R. 3 Eq. 801).

(h) So held in Carter v. Carter (1857), 3 K. & J. 617, 640; Bates v. Johnson (1859), John. 304, 316; Mumford v. Stohwasser (1874), L. It is opposed to the principle that the legal owner's right is paramount to every equitable charge not affecting his own conscience (Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Wilson (1872), 7 Ch. App. 507, 511). In Willoughby v. Willoughby (1756), 1 Term Rep. 763, 771, Lord HARDWICKE considered that the trustee would be liable to his cestui que trust, but that the

585. Provided that the mortgagee gets in the legal estate or obtains the best right to call for it, it affords protection for all his incumbrances, whether created before or after the acquisition of his legal title, as against all other equitable incumbrances in whatever order they have been created (i), and whether he is the original mortgagee or is a transferee of any or all of the securities (k). This necessarily follows from the principle that, where the equities are equal except as regards time, the legal estate gives priority to the equities to which it is attached. But the priority is only allowed in respect of advances made without notice of earlier incumbrances (l), and the mortgagee loses his priority if he parts with the legal estate before the question between himself and the earlier equitable incumbrancers arises (m).

586. A transferee of a legal mortgage who takes without notice is not affected by notice to his transferor (n); hence a transferee who obtains the legal estate and makes a further advance gains priority over prior equitable incumbrances for the whole of the money paid by him notwithstanding that the legal mortgagee had notice thereof at the time of a further advance by himself (o).

mortgagee would be protected by his own want of notice, upon which Lord ELDON observed, in Ex parte Knott (1806), 11 Ves. 609, 613, that if the purchaser was safe the trustee ought to be so; but this does not seem to follow.

(i) See Lloyd v. Attwood, Attwood v. Lloyd (1859), 3 De G. & J. 614, 657, C. A.

(k) See Bates v. Johnson (1859), John. 304. Thus a transferee of the legal mortgage can hold the legal estate to protect further advances made at the date of the transfer (Carlisle Banking Co. v. Thompson (1884), 28 Ch. D. 398; Hosking v. Smith (1888), 13 App. Cas. 582), or subsequently (Wyllie v. Pollen (1863), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 596); in either case without notice of a prior equitable charge.

(l) Lloyd v. Attwood, Attwood v. Lloyd, supra. In Cooke v. Wilton (1860), 29 Beav. 100, a question was raised whether a conveyance of the legal estate was subject to the prior legal charge created by a judgment registered under the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110); but ROMILLY, M.R., avoided it by holding that the conveyance related back to an earlier equitable charge by deposit accompanied by an agreement for a legal mortgage. The purchaser of an equity of redemption who gets in a legal mortgage can use the legal estate to gain priority for purchase-money paid by him over an equitable charge of which he had no notice (Hipkins v. Amery (1860), 2 Giff. 292).

(m) Rooper v. Harrison (1855), 2 K. & J. 86.

(n) Mertins v. Jolliffe (1756), Amb. 311, 313.

(o) Peacock v. Burt (1834), 4 L. J. (CH.) 33. So held in respect of the further advance of £900 made by the legal mortgagee (the original advance being £7,800) after notice of the second mortgage. The person who paid off the first mortgagee, taking a conveyance of the legal estate, and making a further advance of £3,300, without notice, had priority for the full £12,000 over the second mortgagee. This point as to the £900 is not specially noticed in the judgment, but it seems clear that when the transferee pays his money without notice he cannot be affected by notice to the transferor; though it is presumed that, if he buys the mortgage debt at a discount, he cannot then tack it as against a subsequent incumbrancer for more than the amount he pays; compare Ledbrook v. Passman (1888), 57 L. J. (CH.) 855, 859; and see title EQUIT, Vol. XIII., p. 83, note (k).

over the cestui que trust's prior incumbrances of which he has no notice (p).

588. If a mortgagor has created a series of equitable incumbrances he cannot afterwards, except on the occasion of a further advance or other new consideration, give a later one priority by conveying to him the legal estate (q), especially if the mortgagor has contracted to execute a legal mortgage to the earlier incumbrancer (r); but notwithstanding such contract, he can prefer a subsequent mortgagee by conveying to him the legal estate on the occasion of a new advance (s).

Effect of possession of title deeds.

589. The possession of the title deeds by an equitable incumbrancer is important in considering whether there has been such negligence on the part of the legal mortgagee as to deprive him of the benefit of the legal estate (t); but the mere possession of deeds does not entitle the equitable incumbrancer to priority (u), and in proceedings by the legal mortgagee he can be required to give them up notwithstanding that he is a bonâ fide purchaser for value without notice (a).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Tacking.

Nature of the doctrine.

590. The superiority allowed in equity to the legal estate has given rise to the doctrine of tacking. Where a legal mortgage is followed by second and third mortgages, and the third mortgagee, having advanced his money without notice of the second mortgage, takes a transfer of the first mortgage and gets in the legal estate, he thereby gains priority for his third mortgage, and is entitled to payment of both the first and third mortgages before the second mortgagee is paid (b).

Phillips* (1861), 4 De G. F. & J. 208, 216. This privilege is known as the creditor's tabula in naufragio, a term attributed to HALE, C.J. (2 P. Wms. 491; 2 Ves. Sen. 573); see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 83. The Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 7, abolished tacking as from the commencement of the Act (7th August, 1874). This section was repealed by the Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 129, as from the date when it came into operation, except as to anything duly done thereunder before the commencement of the repealing Act (1st January, 1876). Apparently, therefore, a legal estate acquired between these two dates gave no right to tack (Robinson v. Trevor (1883), 12

591. The essential points in tacking are: (1) that the advance to be tacked was made on the security of the land (c); (2) that the third mortgagee had not notice of the second mortgage when he made his advance (d), and has otherwise, save as to time, an equal equity (e); (3) that he has got in and still holds (f) the legal estate (g); and (4) that he holds the legal mortgage and the third mortgage in the same right (h). The puisne mortgagee can protect himself by getting in the legal estate pendente lite; for example, during an action by the second mortgagee to redeem the first (i); but not after a judgment finally settling the priorities (j).

592. A puisne mortgagee cannot protect himself by getting in the legal estate from a satisfied mortgagee, since the latter is a trustee

Q. B. D. 423, 432, C. A., partly overruled on another ground; Hosking v. Smith (1888), 13 App. Cas. 582; p. 332, post). As to tacking against a surety, see title GUARANTEE, Vol. XV., p. 514.

(c) Lacey v. Ingle (1847), 2 Ph. 413. Consequently a judgment creditor cannot get in the first mortgage and tack his judgment debt (Brace v. Marlborough (Duchess) (1782), 2 P. Wms. 491; Ex parte Knott (1806), 11 Ves. 609, 617; Beavan v. Oxford (Earl) (1856), 6 De G. M. & G. 507, 518); but a first mortgagee, if he becomes also a judgment creditor, is treated as having made a further advance on the security of the land (Ex parte Knott, supra; Baker v. Harris (1810), 16 Ves. 397; Godfrey v. Tucker (1863), 33 Beav. 280). In this respect the Land Charges Registration and Searches Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 51), s. 5 (title EXECUTION, Vol. XIV., pp. 70, 72, note (a)), seems to have made no difference. And as to tacking by judgment creditors, see ibid., p. 70.

(d) Brace v. Marlborough (Duchess), supra, at p. 495; Lacey v. Ingle, supra; Bates v. Johnson (1859), John. 304, 313; including notice by lis pendens (*Morret v. Notice to one of several joint mortgagees prevents their tacking a further advance, even though that mortgagee has died (Freeman v. Laing, [1899] 2 Ch. 355).

(f) See pp. 328, 329, ante.

(g) Bailey v. Barnes, [1894] 1 Ch. 25, 36, C. A. Apart from the legal estate, the incumbrancers, if the equities are equal save as regards time, must rank in order of time; it is only by reason of the "superior force and strength" allowed in equity to the legal estate that the later incumbrancer gains priority (Wortley v. Birkhead (1754), 2 Ves. Sen. 571). Hence if after the third mortgagee has got in the first mortgage, it turns out that the legal estate is outstanding, the incumbrancers must be paid according to their priority in order of time (Brace v. Marlborough (Duchess), supra, at p. 496; Phillips v. Phillips (1861), 4 De G. F. & J. 203, 216; Thorpe v. Holdsworth (1868), L. R. 7 Eq. 139, 146); but, if a subsequent mortgagee gets in the legal estate, he can tack his advance to the first mortgage, notwithstanding that he made the advance to, and took his security from, one who falsely represented himself to be owner (Young v. Young (1867), L. R. 3 Eq. 801; note (s), p. 328, ante).

for the equitable incumbrancers according to their priorities (k); but he may get it in from an unsatisfied mortgagee (l), notwithstanding that both he himself (m), and also the first mortgagee (n), then have notice of the second mortgage.

593. The doctrine of tacking is available where a mortgage is made by way of trust for sale (o); and a statutory receipt by a building or other society (p), if it vests the legal estate in a puisne incumbrancer who pays off the society and makes a further advance, operates to the same extent as a conveyance, and enables him to tack his further advance to the mortgage (q).

594. A legal mortgagee, who makes a further advance without notice of an intermediate incumbrance, is entitled to priority for his further advance by virtue of his legal estate (r). And apart from the legal estate, where a mortgage is made to cover a present advance and further advances, the mortgagee is entitled to tack the further advances by force of the contract, and he can do so as against intermediate incumbrances, not protected by the legal estate, of which he had no notice at the time of the further advance; and the same principle applies to a mortgage to secure a current account (s).

(k) Bates v. Johnson (1859), John. 304, 316; Prosser v. Rice (1859), 28 Beav. 68, 74; Taylor v. Russell, [1892] A. C. 244, 259; see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 83, 84.

(n) See Peacock v. Burt (1834), 4 L. J. (CH.) 33; title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 83, note (k). But this gives the first mortgagee power to prefer the third (Rooper v. Harrison (1855), 2 K. & J. 86, 109; and see p. 330, ante); and it must not be assumed that if both second and third mortgagees were offering to redeem, the legal mortgagee could, by transferring the legal estate to the third, give him priority; see West London Commercial Bank v. Reliance Permanent Building Society (1885), 29 Ch. D. 954, 963, C. A.

(o) Thus where there is a legal mortgage to A., a second mortgage to B., and an assignment to C. (without notice of B.'s mortgage) on trust to sell and pay A. and debts due to D. and C., and the residue to the owner, C., on getting in A.'s mortgage and the legal estate, can tack his debt to the first mortgage and exclude B. (Spencer v. Pearson, Pearson v. Spencer (1857), 24 Beav. 266; see Wilmot v. Pike (1845), 5 Hare, 14, 21); but a trustee to sell and pay first, second, and third mortgage debts and to pay the surplus to the mortgagor, where no debt is then due to him, is in the position of the mortgagor, and if he pays off the first mortgagee (with the legal estate) and third mortgagee (who had no notice of the second mortgage), and takes transfers of their securities, he cannot tack against the second mortgagee, any more than the mortgagor himself could have done (Ledbrook v. Passman (1888), 57 L. J. (CH.) 855).

(q) Hosking v. Smith (1888), 13 App. Cas. 582, 588, overruling on this point Robinson v. Trevor (1883), 12 Q. B. D. 423, C. A.

(s) Hopkinson v. Rolt (1861), 9 H. L. Cas. 514; Calisher v. Forbes (1871),

But notice of a subsequent incumbrance prevents any further advances from gaining priority (t), even though made in pursuance of a covenant in the original mortgage (a), and, where the amount of the further advances is limited by the mortgage, advances beyond the limit cannot be referred to the mortgage, and can only be tacked by virtue of the legal estate (b).

SECT. 1.
As between Mortgagees
of Land.

595. Debts which have not been incurred on the security of the land cannot be tacked either against the mortgagor (c) or persons claiming under him inter vivos (d); but after his death they can be tacked against persons on whom the equity of redemption has devolved, so far as the land is in their hands assets for payment of the unsecured debt (e). Thus, since both specialty and simple contract debts are payable out of land (f), they can be tacked as against the heir or devisee (g); and a mortgagee of leaseholds can tack a specialty or simple contract debt as against the executor (h); and now that real estate devolves upon the personal representatives (i), the right to tack is available against them as regards both real and personal estate. But this tacking is allowed only for the purpose of avoiding circuity of action (k), and it cannot be made use of so as to gain priority over other creditors (l).

Order in time the determining factor.

SUB-SECT. 3.—As between Equitable Mortgagees.

596. When the legal estate is outstanding the priority of incumbrancers depends in the first instance upon their order in point of time (m). This is in accordance with the maxim qui prior est tempore, potior est jure (n), and follows from the principle that the mortgagor can only confer on the later incumbrancer such title as is left in him; that is, he conveys subject to the earlier incumbrance (o). Against such earlier incumbrance the later incumbrancer cannot rely on the plea of purchase for value without notice (p), and he can only gain priority on the ground of some act or neglect of the earlier incumbrancer of such a nature as to render it inequitable for him to retain his initial advantage (q). Similarly where land is mortgaged in breach of trust by a trustee or other person in a fiduciary position to a mortgagee who does not obtain the legal estate, the mortgagee is postponed to the claims of the beneficiaries (r).

He cannot gain priority by giving notice to the legal mortgagee, the rule as to priority by notice not applying to land (see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 80), and when a debt is secured on land such rule does not apply to the debt, so that an equitable incumbrancer does not gain priority by giving notice to the mortgagor (*Re Richards, Humber v. deeds and conveyances may be registered (t), and every deed is to be adjudged fraudulent and void against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, unless it is registered before the registration of the conveyance to the subsequent purchaser or mortgagee (u). Primâ facie therefore registered mortgages affecting land in Middlesex rank according to date of registration (a), and registered prevail over unregistered mortgages (b). But registration is not allowed to avoid the effect of notice, and a registered mortgage is postponed to an earlier unregistered mortgage of which the registered mortgagee had actual notice at the time he made his advance (c).

Moreover, such registration is not notice to subsequent mortgagees (d), and the statute does not abolish the effect of the legal estate. Hence a later unregistered legal mortgagee has priority over an earlier registered equitable mortgagee (d), provided he took without notice (d); and a legal registered mortgagee can tack a further advance made without notice, but after the registra-

F. & J. 318, C. A. At law the first registered conveyance has priority (Doe d. Robinson v. Allsop (1821), 5 B. & Ald. 142); but in equity a subsequent mortgagee registering in order to obtain priority over a charge of which he has notice commits a fraud, and, in accordance with the principle that equity will not allow a statute to be made an instrument of fraud (see title EQUIT, Vol. XIII., p. 75), his registration is not allowed to be effectual (Cheval v. Nichols (1725), 1 Stra. 664; Blades v. Blades (1727), 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 358, pl. 12). This has been criticised as an infringement of the statute, but has been acquiesced in (Wyatt v. Barwell (1815), 19 Ves. 435; Agra Bank, Ltd. v. Barry (1874), L. R. 7 H. L. 135). The notice to the registered mortgagee must, however, be actual, and not merely constructive notice (Agra Bank, Ltd. v. Barry, supra, overruling Wormald v. Maitland (1865), 35 L. J. (CH.) 69), "notice so clearly proved as to make it fraudulent in the purchaser to take and register a conveyance in prejudice to the known title of another"; see *Jolland v. Suspicion of notice is not enough (Hine v. Dodd (1742), 2 Atk. 275); nor is vis pendens notice for this purpose (Wyatt v. Barwell, supra; Wallace v. Donegal (Marquis) (1837), 1 Dr. & Wal. 461); though actual notice to an agent is actual notice to the principal (Sheldon v. Cox (1764), Amb. 624; Rolland v. Hart (1871), 6 Ch. App. 678; Agra Bank, Ltd. v. Barry, supra). But a mortgagee who takes without notice of a prior mortgage, either unregistered or defectively registered (Essex v. Baugh (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 620), can, on receiving notice, gain priority by registering; see Elsey v. Lutyens (1850), 8 Hare, 159.

tion, of a second mortgage (e). If the second mortgagee wishes to prevent this he can do so by giving notice. But unless the legal mortgagee registers a charge for his further advance he cannot assert it against a later registered mortgagee; as against such later mortgagee the charge for the further advance is void under the statute (f). Similarly, while an equitable unregistered mortgagee cannot, by getting in the legal estate, gain priority over a subsequent equitable registered mortgage, yet, if his equitable mortgage is subsequent to the registered mortgage, and he advances his money without notice, he can get in the legal estate and thereby obtain priority over the registered mortgage (g).

Where a registered mortgage is given to secure present and future advances, its validity for the further advances over subsequent incumbrances does not depend on the possession of the legal estate, and it secures such advances as against subsequent registered incumbrances not protected by the legal estate, so long as the advances are made without notice, and do not exceed any limit specified in the mortgage. But advances beyond the limit require a fresh charge (h).

598. Under the Yorkshire Registries Act, 1884 (i), assurances entitled to be registered have priority according to the date of registration, and not according to the date of the assurances or of the execution thereof; but this does not interfere with the priorities as between themselves of any assurances the dates of registration of which may be identical (k). All priorities given by the statute must have full effect in all courts, except in cases of actual fraud, and all persons claiming thereunder any legal or equitable interests are entitled to corresponding priorities; and no priority is lost merely by actual or constructive notice, except in cases of actual fraud (k). Moreover, tacking is expressly abolished as regards all lands in the three ridings, except as regards any estate or interest

(f) Credland v. Potter (1874), 10 Ch. App. 8.

(g) See Credland v. Potter, supra. The corresponding Irish statute, (1707) 6 Anne, c. 2, s. 4, contains the further provision that registered deeds are to be "good and effectual, both in law and equity, according to the priority of time of registering," and these words make a registered equitable mortgage prevail over a legal mortgage. Hence in Ireland an unregistered legal mortgage does not prevail against an earlier registered equitable mortgage, and the doctrine of tacking is excluded (Bushell v. Bushell (1803), 1 Sch. & Lef. 90, 98; Latouche v. Dunsany (Lord) (1803), 1 Sch. & Lef. 137, 157, 160; Drew v. Norbury (Earl) (1846), 3 Jo. & Lat. 267, 298; Mill v. Hill (1852), 3 H. L. Cas. 828); but the Irish statute does not, any more than the Middlesex Registry Act, 1708 (7 Anne, c. 20), make a registered mortgage prevail over an earlier unregistered mortgage of which the registered mortgagee had notice at the time of his advance (Agra Bank, Ltd. v. Barry (1874), L. R. 7 H. L. 135).

(h) Compare Hopkinson v. Rolt (1861), 9 H. L. Cas. 514; see pp. 332, 333, ante; and Re O'Byr's Estate (1885), 15 L. R. Ir. 373, C. A.

(k) Yorkshire Registries Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 54), s. 14. This provision gives to a volunteer no further priority or protection than his grantor was entitled to, and a disposition or charge which would be fraudulent and void if unregistered is fraudulent and void notwithstanding registration (ibid.). As to registration not being notice, see note (t), p. 33, post.

which existed before the 1st January, 1885 (l). Hence, all mortgages and charges on lands in Yorkshire rank according to priority of registration, and the legal estate does not give to a subsequent registered incumbrance priority over an incumbrance previously registered (m).

Unregistered instruments are not expressly made fraudulent and void against registered instruments, and in terms the statute (n) prescribes only the order of priority between registered instruments (o); but in effect it gives such instruments priority over all instruments entitled to be, but in fact not, registered (p). As between themselves unregistered charges rank solely as equitable incumbrances, since the legal estate does not give priority (q).

A mortgage for future advances registered under the Yorkshire Registries Act, 1884 (r), is a good security for the further advances—but if any limit is specified, only up to that limit—against a second mortgage, whether registered or not, of which the mortgagee has no notice at the time of the further advance (s). Mere registration of the second mortgage is not notice (t). But where the limit is exceeded, and also where a first registered mortgagee makes a further advance when his mortgage does not cover such advance, he cannot include the further advance against a subsequent registered mortgage unless he has taken and registered a fresh charge for it before the registration of the subsequent mortgage (u).

(n) See note (k), p. 336, ante.

(o) It is framed in this respect differently both from the Middlesex and Irish Acts; compare Re Burke's Estate (1881), 9 L. R. Ir. 24, C. Barker*, [1909] 1 Ch. 321).

The Yorkshire Registries Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 54), s. 15, made registration actual notice, but this is repealed (Yorkshire Registries Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 26), s. 5); and see *Manks v. Bank mortgages.

Thus in practice a banker who has taken and registered in Yorkshire a mortgage to secure a current account up to a certain limit can honour the customer's cheques up to that limit without searching the register again until he has actual notice of a further registered mortgage. When the limit is reached he must not increase the overdraft without searching the register and taking a fresh charge. In Middlesex he must also obtain the legal estate, unless he relies on the deposit of the deeds.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Where Title to Land is Registered.

Registered charges rank in order of registration.

599. Where the title to land is registered under the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 and 1897 (x), registered charges on the land rank as between themselves according to the order in which they are entered on the register, and not according to the order in which they are created (a). Incumbrances which are not registered rank behind registered charges, but as between themselves their priority is determined in the same manner as if the land was not on the register (b).

Effect of registration on possession of legal estate.

The legal estate in the land is not necessarily in the registered proprietor (c), and as between unregistered charges it may be used for the purpose of gaining priority or of tacking (d). But the possession of the legal estate is immaterial as between registered charges; thus a later registered incumbrancer cannot by getting in the legal estate acquire priority over an earlier registered incumbrancer, nor can a registered incumbrancer with the legal estate tack a subsequent charge as against an intermediate registered incumbrancer (e). But where a registered charge is given to secure present and future advances, or a current account, it is effective to secure the future advances or the account until the incumbrancer has notice of a subsequent registered charge (f); and, for this second registered mortgage which are not covered by the first mortgage: whether made before or after the second mortgage, they require to be covered by a new registered charge, and, to be available against the second mortgage, the new charge must be prior in registration.

(a) Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 28. Instruments delivered at the Land Registry (Lincoln's Inn Fields, London) rank in order of delivery (Land Transfer Rules, 1903, r. 111). As to two or more instruments delivered by the same person, see ibid., r. 112. As to instruments delivered by post or under cover, see ibid., r. 113. As to priority notice in respect of an intended transaction, see ibid., r. 117.

(b) See Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 49, under which, subject to the maintenance of the estate and right of the registered proprietor, interests can be created off the register. Since registered charges are created in virtue of the registered title, these appear to have an absolute priority over unregistered charges; but an unregistered incumbrancer can protect himself by a notice or caution entered on the register (ibid.).

(c) Capital and Counties Bank, Ltd. v. Rhodes, [1903] 1 Ch. 631, C. A.; see p. 85, ante.

(d) Unregistered charges take effect as between themselves in the same manner as if the land was not registered. See Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 49, and pp. 327, 330, ante.

(e) Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 28.

(f) Charges to secure further advances are provided for by Land Transfer Rules, 1903, r. 160; and they appear to be subject to the principle of Hopkinson v. Rolt (1861), 9 H. L. Cas. 514; see pp. 332, 333, ante.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Notice.

600. Where the mortgaged property is a debt or other money owing (h), or an interest in trust funds (i), a mortgagee who gives notice to the debtor or trustee gains priority over a mortgagee earlier in date who omits to give notice (k). The omission leaves the property under the control of the mortgagor, and deprives the second mortgagee of the chance of ascertaining the existence of the first mortgage by inquiry of the debtor or trustee. The priority of the second mortgagee does not depend on whether in fact he made inquiry; in such a case it depends solely on notice (l); but a solicitor's lien on a policy does not lose priority by the solicitor's omission to give notice (m). Where the notices are contemporaneous the incumbrances rank in order of time (n).

(h) It is sufficient if notice is given to the person by whom payment of the assigned debt is to be made, whether that person is himself liable or is merely charged with the duty of making the payment (Addison v. Cox (1872), 8 Ch. App. 76, 79); but he must at the time he receives the notice be bound by some contract or obligation to receive and pay over, or to pay over if he has previously received, the fund out of which the debt is to be satisfied. The doctrine of acquiring priority by notice does not apply to land (see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 80), nor to personality which by statute is real estate (Re Carew's Estate (1868), 16 W. R. 1077); but it applies to proceeds of sale of real estate or to any interest in land which can only reach the hands of the assignor in the form of money (Re Hughes' Trusts (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 89, 92; Re Roche's Estate (1890), 25 L. As to notice where there are several trustees, see ibid., p. 383. A notice given to all the trustees is a sufficient protection, notwithstanding that new trustees are subsequently appointed (Re Wasdale, Brittin v. Partridge, [1899] 1 Ch. 163); a notice given to one only is not a sufficient protection (Timson v. Ramsbottom (1837), 2 Keen, 35, 50; see Ward v. Duncombe, supra). Notice given to an executor who afterwards renounces (Re Dallas, [1904] 2 Ch. 385, C. A.), or to an administrator before he obtains administration (Re Kinahan's Trusts, [1907] 1 I. R. 321), is ineffectual. Where the mortgagor claims under a derivative settlement, the notice must be to the trustees of that settlement (title CHOSSES IN ACTION, Vol. IV., p. 382; *Stephens v. Companies are not bound to receive notice of assignments of shares, and the priorities of incumbrancers on shares are therefore not regulated by notice (p).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Registration.

602. Where securities on personal property require to be registered, their priority is determined by the order of the dates of registration. This is so as regards bills of sale (q), mortgages of ships and shares of ships (r), and patents (s).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Stop Orders on Funds in Court.

603. Where the subject of the security is a fund in court, the obtaining of a stop order gives the same priority as notice to the trustees with regard to funds in their hands (a), and notice to the trustees is ineffectual (b); but notice to the trustees before the payment of the fund into court continues to be effectual notwithstanding a stop order obtained by another incumbrancer (c); though the trustee himself will not, without obtaining a stop order,

But where a company has a lien on shares to secure a debt due from a shareholder, it is affected by notice of a subsequent incumbrance so as, on the principle of Hopkinson v. Rolt (1861), 9 H. L. Cas. 514, to prevent it from tacking further indebtedness (Bradford Banking Co. v. Briggs (1886), 12 App. Cas. 29).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Notice in lieu of Distringas.

604. An incumbrancer with an equitable interest in shares can protect himself by serving on the company a distringas notice (e). This does not give him any priority in respect of his incumbrance (f), but it prevents the registration of a transfer of the shares without notice to the incumbrancer and until he has had time to obtain an order restraining the transfer.

SECT. 3.—Failure to Gain, or Loss of, Priority.

SUB-SECT. 1.—By Notice of Prior Rights.

605. An incumbrancer later in point of time who would, by reason of his possession of the legal estate, or (in Middlesex) by registration of his mortgage, or by notice to a debtor or to trustees or to an insurance office, or by obtaining a stop order, or by registration in the register of patents, be primâ facie entitled to priority over an earlier incumbrancer, will fail to gain this priority if he has notice of the earlier incumbrance at the time when he advances his money (g). Such notice may be either actual or constructive.

606. Actual notice is equally effectual whether it is received by the incumbrancer himself or by a solicitor or other agent (h) employed by him in the matter of the mortgage (i).

607. A mortgagee has constructive notice of an earlier incumbrance if it would have come to his knowledge, or to the knowledge of his solicitor or other agent, if proper inquiries and inspections of deeds had been made (k). Thus the mortgagee is affected with notice if he omits to make usual and proper inquiries as to the mortgagor's title (l), and if such inquiries would have disclosed the earlier incumbrance (m); a fortiori if he designedly abstains from making inquiry in order to avoid notice, and also if he omits to follow up an inquiry suggested by actual notice (n).

SUB-SECT. 2.—By Conduct in relation to Title Deeds.

Duty to obtain deeds.

608. A legal mortgagee who, on taking his mortgage, omits to inquire for the title deeds is postponed to an earlier incumbrancer in whose possession they then are (o), and also to a subsequent the mortgagor is himself a solicitor and prepares the mortgage, and the mortgagee employs no other solicitor, knowledge of the mortgagor will not be imputed to the mortgagee (Hewitt v. Loosemore (1851), 9 Hare 449, 455; Espin v. Pemberton (1859), 3 De G. & J. 547). A solicitor to whom the mortgagee's solicitors delegate some ministerial duty is not the agent of the mortgagee for the purpose of imputed notice (Wyllie v. Pollen (1863), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 596; Foxon v. Gascoigne (1874), 9 Ch. App. 657, n., 658, n.).

(k) Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), s. 3 (1). As to the effect of the statutory restriction on the doctrine of constructive notice, see Bailey v. Barnes, [1894] 1 Ch. 25, C. A.; Hunt v. Luck, [1902] 1 Ch. 428, C. A.; and see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 87.

(l) Gainsborough (Earl) v. Watcombe Terra Cotta Co., Dunning v. Gainsborough (Earl) (1895), 54 L. J. (CH.) 991, 994. But a company entitled to a statutory charge may be absolved from the duty of making inquiries (General Land Drainage and Improvement Co. v. United Counties Bank (1910), 103 L. T. 418).

(m) A mortgagee having notice of a deed forming a link in the mortgagor's title has notice of the contents of the deed (Patman v. Harland (1881), 17 Ch. D. 353); but not of matters which the deed would not have disclosed (Carter v. Williams (1870), L. R. 9 Eq. 678; Wilkes v. Spooner, [1911] 2 K. B. 473, 487, C. A.).

(n) See title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 87, note (k). Actual notice of an incumbrance is constructive notice of matters which the intending mortgagee would have discovered if he had made inquiries as to the incumbrance (Taylor v. Baker (1818), 5 Price, 306; Jones v. Smith (1841), 1 Hare, 43, 55; Penny v. Watts (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 150; Jones v. Williams (1857), 24 Beav. 47, 58; Montefiore v. Browne (1858), 7 H. L. Cas. 241), and as to the doctrine of constructive notice generally, see cases cited in title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 86, note (e); Aldritt v. Maconchy, [1906] 1 I. R. 416; [1908] 1 I. R. 333, C. A.; Bank of Bombay v. Suleman Somji (1908), 99 L. T. 532. As to notice where a deed may or may not affect the land, see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 87, note (k); West v. Reid (1843), 2 Hare, 249, 258; Lloyd's Banking Co. v. Jones (1885), 29 Ch. D. 221, 230. As to notice from failure to make inquiries of the tenant, see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 87, 88, note (k); Bailey v. Richardson (1852), 9 Hare, 734; Holmes v. Powell (1856), 8 De G. M. & G. 572, C. A. (possession of mines); Cavander v. Bulteel (1873), 9 Ch. App. 79 (property in possession of partnership where mortgage by one partner of a moiety for his private debt); Green v. Rheinberg (1911), 104 L. T. 149. But where the possession is vacant, inquiry need not be made of the last tenant (Miles v. Langley (1829), 1 Russ. & M. 39); and see Penny v. Watts (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 150; (1850), 2 De G. & Sm. 501, 520, as to an agreement not conferring an immediate title to possession.

(o) As to the right to custody of deeds, see pp. 204 et seq., ante. Formerly the omission to make any inquiry for the deeds was treated as evidence of fraud, or gross or wilful negligence, and on this ground the legal mortgagee was postponed (Hewitt v. Loosemore (1851), 9 Hare, 449, 458;

incumbrancer who inquires for the deeds and gets them or, if he is the third incumbrancer, inquires and finds that they are with the second incumbrancer (p). But the legal mortgagee is not postponed if he makes inquiry and receives a reasonable excuse for the non-delivery of the deeds (q); nor is he postponed if he receives only part of the deeds under a reasonable belief that he is receiving all (r).

609. A legal mortgagee who gets the title deeds into his custody and subsequently loses or parts with possession of them is not postponed to a subsequent incumbrancer to whom they are delivered on the ground of mere negligence or want of prudence in the custody of them (s), nor is he postponed if he has lent them to the mortgagor upon a reasonable representation made by the latter as to his object in borrowing them (a); but he will be postponed on the ground of fraud, that is, where he has assisted in or connived at the fraud which has led to the creation of a subsequent equitable estate without notice of the prior legal estate (b); and he will also

A.; and it was said that in order to postpone him it must be possible for the court to infer wilful abstention (Ratcliffe v. Barnard (1871), 6 Ch. App. 652); but the present view is that the mere omission to make the ordinary inquiry for title deeds is sufficient to postpone the legal mortgagee, either because it gives him constructive notice of the earlier incumbrance (Berwick & Co. v. Price, [1905] 1 Ch. 632; Walker v. Linom, [1907] 2 Ch. 104), or because his negligence deprives him of the benefit of the legal estate (Oliver v. Hinton, [1899] 2 Ch. 264, C. A.; see Lloyd's Banking Co. v. Jones (1885), 29 Ch. D. 221). * The postponement was placed on the ground of notice in Worthington v. Morgan (1849), 16 Sim. 547; Hipkins v. Amery (1860), 2 Giff. 292; Spencer v. Clarke (1878), 9 Ch. D. 137; Re Weniger's Policy, [1910] 2 Ch. 291; and see Maxfield v. Burton (1873), L. R. 17 Eq. 15. In copyholds, the copy admission should be called for; it is not sufficient to search the rolls (Whitbread v. Jordan (1835), 1 Y. & C. (EX.) 303). The negligence of trustees binds their cestuis que trust, although infants (Lloyd's Banking Co. v. Jones, supra; Walker v. Linom, supra); see title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES. Where mortgages are contemporaneous, the mortgagee who gets the title deeds has priority over one who does not inquire for them (Hopgood v. Ernest (1865), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 116, C. A., where, apparently, the mortgagees were tenants in common or joint tenants of the legal estate).

(p) Clarke v. Palmer (1882), 21 Ch. D. 124. Where the legal mortgagee does not inquire for the deeds, the same principle applies both to prior and subsequent incumbrances (Walker v. Linom, supra); but there must be some evidence of negligence (Re Greer, Greer v. Greer, [1907] 1 I. R. 57).

(q) Hewitt v. Loosemore (1851), 9 Hare, 449, 458; Agra Bank, Ltd. v. Barry (1874), L. R. 7 H. L. 135; Brown v. Stedman (1896), 44 W. R. 458; see Barnett v. Weston (1806), 12 Ves. 130.

R. 607; the same principle applies as between successive mortgagees by deposit (Roberts v. Croft (1857), 2 De G. & J. 1; Dixon v. Muckleston (1872), 8 Ch. App. 155), unless the prior mortgagee has left the substantial part of the deeds with the mortgagor and is otherwise negligent (Re Lambert's Estate (1884), 13 L. R. Ir. 234, C. A.; and see p. 79, ante).

(a) Peter v. Russel (1716), 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 321; Martinez v. Cooper (1826), 2 Russ. 198. But he may be postponed if he is guilty of negligence in not obtaining possession of the title deeds (Walker v. Linom, supra).

be postponed if he has returned the deeds to, or left them with, the mortgagor for the purpose of enabling the mortgagor to raise money on them (c), notwithstanding that the limit which he has assigned for the loan has been exceeded (d).

610. As between equitable incumbrancers the mere possession of the title deeds is not enough to give a subsequent incumbrancer priority over an earlier one (c); there must be some default on the part of the earlier incumbrancer (f); but if the possession of the title deeds is an essential part of the earlier incumbrancer's security, the same considerations arise as in the case of a legal mortgagee, and if he omits to inquire for and get in the deeds (g), or, having got them, allows them by negligence or design to be again, without sufficient reason, in the possession of the mortgagor (h), he will be ELDON's requirement in Evans v. Bicknell (1810), 6 Ves. 174, 190, of fraud or gross negligence amounting to evidence of fraud as the condition for postponing the legal mortgagee. In Northern Counties of England Fire Insurance Co. v. Whipp (1884), 26 Ch. D. 482, C. A., FRY, L.J., at p. 494, while pointing out that negligence and fraud were incompatible, recognised that omission to use ordinary care in the custody of the deeds might be evidence of fraud; but the decision seems to have made it impracticable to postpone the legal mortgage in the case in question except on the ground of actual fraud (Manners v. Mew (1885), 29 Ch. D. 725); compare title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., pp. 692, 693.

(d) Perry Herrick v. Attwood (1857), 2 De G. & J. 21; Brocklesby v. Temperance Building Society, [1895] A. C. 173. This is frequently put on the ground of estoppel and is fully treated in title ESTOPPEL, Vol. XIII., pp. 393, 394.

(e) See Evans v. Bicknell (1801), 6 Ves. 174, where Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 183, corrected the statement of BULLER, J., in Goodtitle d. Norris v. Morgan (1787), 1 Term Rep. 755, at p. 762, that a second mortgagee who took the title deeds without notice was always preferred. In Bailey v. Fermor (1821), 9 Price, 262, 267, Goodtitle d. Norris v. Morgan, supra, is treated as overruled on this point; and see Barnett v. Weston (1806), 12 Ves. 130, 132; Allen v. Knight (1846), 5 Hare, 272, 279; on appeal (1847), 11 Jur. 527. As to the postponement of equitable incumbrancers, see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 80.

(f) Allen v. Knight (1847), 11 Jur. 528. He is not in default if the mortgage is of a reversion (Tourle v. Rand (1789), 2 Bro. C. C. 650), or if he gets the only title deed available at the time (Union Bank of London v. Kent (1888), 39 Ch. D. 238, C. A.); and since a purchaser is not entitled to the deeds until completion, his equitable title under the contract prevails over an equitable incumbrance created by the vendor by deposit of the title deeds after the contract (Flinn v. Pountain (1889), 58 L. J. (CH.) 389). But a mortgagee not immediately entitled to deeds is not bound to take precautions against a future fraud by the mortgagor in respect of them (Union Bank of London v. Kent, supra), and if the mortgagee omits to get in the deeds, by reason of a false recital in the mortgage of an existing mortgage by deposit, he is not postponed to a subsequent actual mortgage by deposit (Frazer v. Jones (1846), 5 Hare, 475; on appeal (1848), 12 Jur. 443; see Jones v. Thomas (1862), 11 W. R. 50).

(g) Farrand v. Yorkshire Banking Co. (1888), 40 Ch. D. 182; see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 80. A blank transfer should be accompanied by the certificate, and the later of two transferees, who gets the certificate, will have priority (Kelly v. Munster and Leinster Bank (1891), 29 L. R. Ir. 19, C. A.).

(h) If they are redelivered to the mortgagor for a particular purpose, it is negligence for the mortgagee not to press for their return after a reasonable time (Waldron v. Sloper (1852), 1 Drew. 193; Dowle v. Saunders (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 242; Layard v. Maud (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 397).

611. Where an unpaid vendor hands to the purchaser the title deeds with a conveyance containing a receipt for the purchase-money, he thereby enables the purchaser to represent himself as the owner of the property, and he will be postponed to an equitable mortgagee from the purchaser who obtains the deeds (i); and, if he remains in possession as tenant to the purchaser, there is no notice to a subsequent incumbrancer of his lien for unpaid purchase-money (k). An owner of shares who hands a transfer and the certificate to a broker for the purpose of sale is postponed to an equitable mortgagee from the broker notwithstanding that the broker by mortgaging the shares exceeds his authority (l).

612. Where a trust has been constituted, the title deeds are properly left in the custody of the trustee, and if he uses them, in breach of trust, for the purpose of creating an equitable incumbrance, the title of the cestui que trust will prevail over that of the incumbrancer (m). If, however, the trustee is authorised to dispose of the property, and purports to dispose of it in accordance with his authority, the cestui que trust will be postponed to an equitable mortgagee under the purchaser (n), unless the disposition is in substance one not authorised by the trust (o).

SUB-SECT. 3.—By Fraud.

613. Where the evidence establishes that a mortgage has been created in fraud of prior incumbrances, the mortgagee will be postponed (p).

(i) Rice v. Rice (1853), 2 Drew. 73; Smith v. Evans (1860), 28 Beav. 59. But a prior incumbrancer who has been induced by misrepresentation to release his security will not necessarily be postponed (Beckett v. Cordley (1784), 1 Bro. C. C. 353).

A.; see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 80, 81. Where the trustees improperly invest the trust fund in the purchase of land the cestuis que trust are entitled to follow it into the land, and this is not a mere equity, but gives them an equitable interest in the land, so that they will not be postponed to an equitable incumbrancer under the trustees without notice (Cave v. Cave (1880), 15 Ch. D. 639); but a different view has prevailed in Ireland, and the cestuis que trust in such a case are treated as having an inferior equity to the incumbrancer (Re Ffrench's Estate (1887), 21 L. R. Ir. 283, 312, C. A.; Re Sloane's Estate, [1895] 1 I. R. 146, 165; Bank of Ireland v. Cogry Spinning Co., [1900] 1 I. R. 219); and generally an executor or trustee disposing of the estate or trust funds to a purchaser for value without notice has been treated as giving the purchaser an equity superior to that of the cestuis que trust (Bourke v. Lee, [1904] 1 I. R. 280; Re Bobbett's Estate, [1904] 1 I. R. 461).

SECT. 4.—As between Mortgagees and other Incumbrancers.

614. A judgment debt or Crown debt can be made a charge on land of the debtor (q), but, in order that the charge may be effectual against a mortgagee, a writ or order for enforcing the debt must have been registered at the time of the mortgage (r).

Under various statutes money may be raised for the improvement of land and secured by charge upon it, and registers of such charges are kept. Such registered charges may have priority both over existing and future incumbrances (s). In the same way charges for compensation for enfranchisement of copyhold land have priority over incumbrances on the land (t).

Annuities created otherwise than by marriage settlement require to be registered in the Central Office of the High Court of Justice, and unless so registered do not affect any lands so far as regards mortgagees (u).

Deeds of arrangement with creditors require to be registered under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887 (a), and unless so registered do not affect mortgagees (b).

A receiving order made against a debtor does not prejudice a mortgagee who takes his security before the date of the receiving order without notice of the act of bankruptcy (c).

An adverse claim against the mortgagor in respect of the property, if the subject of litigation, should be registered as a lis pendens, and on such registration will, if established, have priority over subsequent dispositions (d).

SECT. 1.—Change of Name in General.

616. The law prescribes no rules limiting a man's liberty to change his name (a). He may assume any name he pleases in addition to or substitution for his original name; and in adopting even the name or combination of names by which another person is already known he does not commit a legal wrong against that person (b). The law concerns itself only with the question whether he has in fact assumed and has come to be known by a name different from that by which he was originally known.

617. With regard to the first or christian name given to a person on baptism, it is said that it can be changed on confirmation, and it seems to be implied that otherwise no change is possible (c).

(a) As to change of a name of a building society, see title BUILDING SOCIETIES, Vol. III., p. 330; as to change of name of a company, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 84; as to change of name of a corporation, see title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., pp. 307, 308; as to change of name of a friendly society, see title FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, Vol. XV., pp. 135, 136; as to change of name of an industrial society, see title INDUSTRIAL, PROVIDENT, AND SIMILAR SOCIETIES, Vol. XVII., pp. 13, 14.

(b) Du Boulay v. Du Boulay (1869), L. R. 2 P. C. 430; Cowley (Earl) v. Cowley (Countess), [1901] A. C. 450; but as to the use of trade names, see Du Boulay v. Du Boulay, supra, per Lord CHELMSFORD, at p. 441; and title TRADE MARKS, TRADE NAMES, AND DESIGNS. A man has no legal right to the exclusive use of a name he chooses to affix to any part of his landed property, whether house or land; see Day v. Brownrigg (1878), 10 Ch. D. 294, C. A., per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 302. As to the naming of streets, see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., p. 255. As to tortious acts in general, see title TORT.

(c) Co. Litt. 3 a: "A man may have divers names at divers times, but not divers Christian names." With regard to change of name at confirmation, which is also mentioned in the same connection, some doubt was thrown on Coke's dictum by Dr. Burn (Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. I., p. 111), but in the opinion of Sir R. Phillimore (Phillimore, Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, 2nd ed., Vol. I., p. 517) the dictum still remains good and the law has not been altered. Coke mentions the case of Sir Francis Gawdie, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, who, being baptised as Thomas, took the name of Francis on confirmation. As recently as 1886 a similar change took place; see Notes and Queries, 7th Series., Vol. II., p. 77; and title ECCLESIASTICAL LAW,

SECT. 1.
Change of Name in General.

It may be correct to say that a first name, other than that received at baptism or at confirmation, is not a christian name; but it is clear that a man may at any time assume another name in addition to or in place of his baptismal name, and that for all practical purposes the name so assumed may become his first or christian name (d). In a modern instance authority to take a new christian name was given by Act of Parliament (e).

A person who in executing an instrument subscribes a first name which is not his christian name may be sued in that name, and is bound as he would be if he had signed his proper name (f). In this respect there is no difference between the christian or first name and the surname.

The name of either kind which a man himself adopts, and which is adopted by his friends and other persons having dealings with him, becomes his name.

Surname.

618. As regards surnames (g), there never was any doubt that, as in the first instance they were arbitrarily assumed, so they could be changed at pleasure. An Act of Parliament, Royal Licence, or other such formality is not required for the purpose (h).

Vol. XL., p. 689. An addition to the baptismal name at confirmation is usual in the Roman Catholic Church (Phillimore and Fry, Changes of Name, 1905 ed., p. xxi.).

(d) R. v. Billingshurst (Inhabitants) (1814), 3 M. & S. 250 (Abraham Langley had for three years been known in the village, where his banns of marriage were published, by the name of George Smith; it was held that the banns in which he was designated by that name were properly published). As to the baptismal name ceasing on the acquisition of a new name at confirmation, see Walden v. Holman (1704), 6 Mod. Rep. 115, per HOLT, C.J., at p. 116. As to the necessity of inserting the old as well as the new name in a memorandum of a conveyance executed in the old name, see Staunton v. Staunton (1864), 15 I. Ch. R. 464. It has been said that where there is a double name there is a presumption that the person is known by the first name (Re Richards, Ex parte Richards (1842), 6 Jur. 136). As to the assumption of a surname by a bastard, see title BASTARDY, Vol. II., p. 438.

(e) Private Act, entitled "Baines' Name," 1907, whereby the name of Henry Rodd was assumed in lieu of the original christian name, Raymond Hill.

(f) Evans v. King (1745), Willes, 554; Gould v. Barnes (1811), 3 Taunt. 504; Williams v. Bryant (1839), 5 M. & W. 447. When pleas in abatement were allowed, and such a plea might be founded on a mistake made with regard to the defendant's name, it was not enough to say that the name applied to him was not his baptismal name; it had further to be averred that he had not by repute acquired that name (Walden v. Holman (1704), 6 Mod. Rep. 115; Jones v. Macquillin (1793), 5 Term Rep. 195; Addis v. Power (1831), 7 Bing. 455).

(g) The practice of using surnames was, it is said, first introduced about the time of the Norman conquest, and was not commonly adopted until the close of the fourteenth century; see Markland's paper in "Archæologia," Vol. XVIII., p. 105; Lower on English Surnames, Vol. I., p. 37; Vol. II., p. 60; Lower, Patronymica Britannica, 1860 ed., p. xiii. As to the necessity of a surname being the last name used, see Spencer v. Spencer (1912), Times, 21st March, and note (r), p. 352, post.

(h) Barlow v. Bateman (1730), 3 P. Wms. 65; Gulliver v. Ashby (1766), 4 Burr. 1929; Doe d. Luscombe v. Yates (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 544; Davies v. Loundes (1835), 1 Bing. (N. C.) 597, 618. For a discussion of the question, see the debate in the House of Commons in the case of Jones taking the name of Herbert, Parliamentary Debates, Series 3, Vol. 167, cols. 430 to 436. At that time the idea seems to have prevailed that a Royal Licence was necessary to secure official recognition of a change of name. Now, it seems, the War Office does not require a Royal Licence.

619. By repute and without formality of any kind, names may be adopted so as to constitute the true christian name or surname of a person for the purpose of the due publication of banns (i).

SECT. 1.
Change of Name in General.

SECT. 2.—Change of Name in Particular Cases.

620. Change of name without any formality has been constantly recognised by the courts in regard to attorneys and solicitors. An application for a change of the name on the rolls is made to the Master of the Rolls. All that is required of a solicitor seeking to have his new name entered on the roll is the production of a Royal Licence (j), or a statement of some plausible reason for the change, and an assurance that no legal proceedings against him in his original name are apprehended (k).

621. When a woman on her marriage assumes, as she usually does in England (l), the surname of her husband in substitution for her father's name, it may be said that she acquires a new name by repute (m). The change of name is in fact rather than in law a consequence of the marriage. Having assumed her husband's name she retains it, notwithstanding the dissolution of the marriage by decree, unless she chooses thereupon to resume her maiden name (n). On her second marriage there is nothing in point of law to prevent her from retaining her first husband's name (o).

Married
woman.

622. When in a will or other such instrument an individual, described by the name by which, at the date of the instrument, he is known, is named as a person to take a benefit under it, there can be no doubt that the adoption by that individual of another name cannot affect his rights under the instrument (p). A woman, for instance, mentioned in a will by her maiden name, who before the testator's death has married and taken her husband's name, is none the less entitled under the will. But when the person who should take is one of a class, not a named individual, and it is further provided that he shall bear a certain name, it is a question of

In the footnote to Re Gimlet, supra, it is noted that in a later case the court observed that in future the allegation of some special reason for change would be required. Doubtless attention had been called to the question of change of name by the discussion in Parliament in the case mentioned in note (h), p. 350, ante.

(l) In Scotland, although a married woman is usually addressed by the surname of her husband, the maiden name is frequently used, as, for example, in announcing her death; and see Phillimore and Fry, Changes of Name, 1905 ed., p. xvii.

construction whether the word "name" is to be read in its primary sense, or is used to denote the stock to which the beneficiary shall belong (q).

SECT. 3.—Formalities as to Change of Name or of Arms.

623. In order to preserve testimony and to obviate the doubt and confusion which a change of name is likely to involve, it is usual to adopt one of the three following courses, that is, to obtain a private Act of Parliament, to obtain a Royal Licence, or to execute a deed poll.

Frequently in a will or settlement in which the assumption of the name of the testator or settlor or of his name and arms is enjoined, the adoption of one of those formalities is also directed. The assumption of the name either in addition to or in substitution for the person's original name, evidenced by the prescribed formality, may, by means of a forfeiture clause, be made the condition on which his right to property depends (r).

Act of Parliament.

624. Recourse to Parliament for authority to adopt a new surname is unusual, but it may be necessary to obtain a private Act, as, for instance, in a case in which the "name and arms" clause directs the adoption of that course (s).

Royal Licence.

625. Another method by which a change of name can be authenticated is by Royal Licence (t).
